Battle brewing on pirate TV

Science Minister Pat McGeer says he'll have a dish antenna in operation next week to pirate U.S. television signals and the newly elected chairman of the Canadian Cable Television Association has served notice Canada's cable operators are poised to become pirates too.

Cable association chairman Jack Davis said Thursday the operators are so hungry for pay television they're ready to defy the federal communications law by pirating first-run movies, sports and entertainment broadcasts from U.S. satellites.

And if the government throws cable executives into jail, the subscribers would follow them into the cells, he said.

"In this case 'the law is an ass'," he told a news conference.

Davis' comments came as McGeer said he will press ahead with a plan to instal the satellite dish antenna at the legislature next week even though he does not have a licence.

McGeer said he will be breaking the law but said he doesn't care.

The minister said he is certain MoT officials will not close down a B.C. government pirate station.

Davis, elected on the last day of the association's annual convention, said operators' anger and frustration is fueled by two factors.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has so far refused to allow cable companies to reap the profits of pay-TV, which has provided huge sums for the U.S. industry, he said.

At the same time, pirate companies have thumbed their noses at the CRTC and set up satellite dishes to pull pay-TV signals into TV-starved, isolated communities.

John Meisel CRTC chairman, said earlier this week a crackdown is coming on the pirates.

But there were conflicting reports Thursday quoting spokesmen for the federal communications department as saying they plan to take no action against communities like Tofino and other which have set up their own dish systems to view U.S. programming.

The residents of Tofino, Chetwynd, Cassiar and McBride, to name only a few of the communities plucking U.S. programming from the air, have made it clear they'll fight any attempt to black out their screens.

Arden Smith. chairman of the Chetwynd communications committee, said ' "I don't think people would stand by idly."

Werner Shneeberger, who runs a dish system in Cassiar, said he told the CRTC back in 1978 what he was doing.

"There's no way someone can come in and say, okay, for 19 months you've enjoyed it, now we're going to take it out. We won't give in, we've got a lot of money tied up."

McGeer said he doesn't think much of Meisel's threat of a crackdown.

"We don't want a bunch of federal snoops in running shoes, tripping all over B.C., hunting for satellite receiving stations. It's preposterous," McGeer said.

The minister said his venture into TV piracy is designed to demonstrate the wide variety of programming available from Canada's Anik-A and Anik-B satellites.

However, it is clear he also intends to strike a blow on behalf of the estimated 200 users of illegal dish antennas in B.C.

"I don't think any satellite receiving stations, here or anywhere else in Canada, should be shut down," McGeer said.

"We should be free to pick up satellite signals just the same way we're free to pick up radio signals."

The illegal dish antennas, when tuned in to the right satellite, can bring in signals intended for U.S. cable companies. The result is the sudden availability of hundreds of extra TV channels — unlimited entertainment.

The sky is — literally — the limit.

McGeer's big dish is scheduled to be installed at the rear of the Legislative Buildings Monday.

By Tuesday it should be tuned in and operating, providing pirated programs to TV sets in the MLAs' lounge, the press gallery and a few other offices.

Health cost hikes hard on old: NDP

Increases in direct charges for health services ranging from in-patient care at acute care hospitals to the per-diem rate for long-term and extended care facilities were announced Thursday by Health Minister Rafe Mair.

Mair described the hikes as fair but NDP MLAs immediately attacked the moves, warning they will work a hardship, particilarly for the elderly.

NDP health critic Dennis Cocke said the increases mean the government is picking the pockets of the people.

And Victoria NDP MLA Gordon Hanson said the increased per-diem charge for long-term and extended care will be a blow to the senior citizens of Victoria.

"The majority of elderly people in this town, contrary to what the millionaires think, have as their only source of income the Canada Pension Plan and supplements.

"If you want to hit the elderly where it hurts them most, hit them in health care. And this is what they are doing," Hanson said.

Mair said the increases are designed to bring fees in line with the rise in the cost of living since the last time they were adjusted.

After this, the fees will be pegged to the Consumer price Index and adjusted every year.

The changes which go into effect July 1:

—The charge for in-patient care in acute-care hospitals will rise to $5.50 a day from the present $4.

—Day surgery charges will go to $5 from $2.

—The per-diem rate in long-term care and extended care facilities will increase to $8.50 from the current $6.50.

—Medical plan premiums will be increased about 15 per cent.

—The maximum charge for ambulance service will rise to $125 from the present $100 under a new fee structure.

The charge for emergency treatment in hospitals is also likely to go up. The present charge of $2 will remain in effect pending discussions between the ministry of health and the B.C. Health Association.

Two minor charges will be eliminated.

The $1-a-day charge for day clinical services (typically for psychiatric and diabetic care) and the similar daily charge for extended care for children, are abolished.

Inflation has hit everything else and it's only right that health care should be increased accordingly, Mair argued.

The new fee schedule accurately reflects increases in the cost of living, he said, and pegging the rates to the CPI will be a better way of handling future increases.

"No one is going to be overjoyed to have costs go up. That I can understand. But you have to keep pace with the cost of living and I think this is a fair way of doing it," Mair said.

Cocke, however, said health care costs were never designed to be tied to the cost of living or to reflect a user-pay principle.

"It's irresponsible, inflationary and something the people should look at very seriously when they are considering this government's performance," he said.

Having a blast in old London

LONDON (CP) — For fool-proof bombings, assassinations, kidnappings or hostage-takings (in London, you can afford to dither) British journalist Christopher Ward has the answer.

Inspired by the recent spate of terrorist activity here, Ward has prepared a rather sharply satirical guide for prospective tourists and terrorists.

"We thank you for choosing our fine city as your base," Ward tells would-be terrorists in an article published by Girl Magazine, "and we hope you will enjoy your stay here."

"Be sure to invest in a London transport Red Rover go anywhere ticket. It enables you to carry out assassinations at any number of hotels and embassies in a 24-hour period with no extra charge for transporting suit case bombs weighing less than 20 pounds."

But a trusty black cab may be better suited for other missions, he says.

"A London cabbie will take you anywhere with a gun pointed at the nape of his neck."

He points out one shopping precinct of particular interest to the terrorist enthusiast.

"You will find there the latest timing device to detonate your bomb should Colonel Khadafi's own devices malfunction at the last minute (not open on Sundays.)"

Under the heading "excursions", he tells tourists, "Don't miss the famous, burned-out Iranian embassy in Prince's Gate" where five Iranian-Arab heroes died defending their right to hold 24 hostages captive for nine days . . . see the SAS (Special Air Service) in action by staging your own siege . . . Walk around the hole in the ground in Mayfair where two Iraqis blew themselves to pieces in their Volvo."

"We do hope you will enjoy your stay . . . London prides itself on being a world centre of international terrorism."

High fliers facing cut-off?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal government should limit the number of drinks a passenger can be served on airline flights, Shirley Pool of the Canadian Air Line Flight Attendants's Association told the Dubin commission on air safety Thursday.

Pool said attendants have to decide whether to obey the law by not serving somebody who is intoxicated or honor the policy of most airlines to promote service to the travelling public.

Chief commission counsel John Sopinka said: "My experience in first class is that it is the flight attendants who are always pushing drinks on the passengers."

Stu Keate, retired Vancouver Sun publisher, was called by the B.C. section of the Canadian Bar Association to support its argument for an independent body to investigate air crashes and report publicly.

Mine tailings killing lake

One of the biggest lakes on Vancouver Island is in danger of dying from an overdose of heavy metal.

Tailings from a Western Mines copper, lead and zinc operation are discharged into the south end of Buttle Lake, near Campbell River.

An environment ministry report on the lake, based on more than 10 years of monitoring, was released Thursday.

It states the concentrations of dissolved zinc have increased significantly in the past decade and the water quality is approaching borderline conditions for fish and other organisms.

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers, however, indicates no action is planned to correct the situation.

"The discharge by Western Mines is well within the allowable limits of their permit," Rogers said.

"Nothing can be done at this time. If it gets worse, we'll act."

The ministry of health, meanwhile, reports that water in Buttle Lake is safe for drinking and bathing and it is even safe to eat fish taken from the lake.

However, the ministry says it is concerned with any potential threat to public water supplies and will maintain a close liaison with the environment ministry during more detailed studies.

Buttle Lake is a distant part of the watershed system which supplies Campbell River.

Bob Nixon, spokesman for the Sierra Club, said today Rogers should be taking a tougher approach to the situation.

He said environment ministry staff could, if so directed, outline what Western Mines has to do to correct the problem.

"His approach in dealing with a pollution problem is not responsible," he said.

Nixon said Rogers as enviroment minister should have the philosophy that anyone who damages the environment is held accountable for the results.

Couvelier set to sue Campbell

The Tillicum shopping centre row — already a legal morass — became even more tangled today.

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier threatened to sue Capital Region District chairman James Campbell and Campbell told the Times today he hopes Couvelier does just that.

"I hope he does, because I am absolutely confident nothing I've said is incorrect," Campbell said.

Couvelier threatened the suit after the CRD chairman released a statement on the mayor's role in the controversy.

"It is my intention to protect my public record very aggressively," Couvelier said, adding his lawyer has been asked to determine if Campbell's statement is libelous.

"If I have the basis for a suit against chairman Campbell, I will launch it," he said.

The Tillicum legal battle is set for full trial before the B.C. Supreme Court.

Couvelier said the latest development is unfortunate because it detracts from the central issue — whether the CRD has the legal right to impose restrictions on the size of a municipal development.

The CRD chairman released the statement today in response to Saanich's decision Thursday to reject an offer by Victoria Ald. Bob Wright that would settle the Tillicum issue out-of-court.

Pan-Pacific conflict charges flying

The conflict of interest controversy swirling around the Pan-Pacific Society entered the B.C. legislature Thursday with a call by Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber for all members of the group to declare their business interests.

Dr. Arne Lane, president of the non-profit organization spearheading the drive for a Victoria convention centre, has admitted that through his company, Shadee-Lane Ranch Ltd., he had for four months this year a one-quarter interest in Hartwig Court, adjacent to the centre site at Fort and Wharf.

In April, when fellow members of Pan-Pacific suggested he could be accused of conflict of interest, Lane agreed to sell his share to the other three partners in the deal. On May 20 final legal arrangements to complete the transfer were made.

In the legislature, Finance Minister Hugh Curtis said when he first heard of the report he expressed grave concern and asked for an investigation.

Curtis is the minister responsible for the Provincial Capital Commission, which is to build the $8 million centre.

"I was informed that the individual under discussion today had in fact divested himself of any interest in an adjacent piece of property," Curtis told Barber.

Outside the house, Curtis said he is going to investigate further.

The minister also gave several strong indications during his question period exchange with Barber that Pan-Pacific has lost its position of influence with the government.

The organization of downtown businessmen was formed in late 1978 under the aegis of then cabinet minister Sam Bawlf.

It has been closely involved in planning the convention centre for the last 18 months and was expected to take over operation of the finished building.

Curtis said there have been suggestions that the original plan to have Pan-Pacific operate the centre is already locked in place.

"That is not the case."

He acknowledged a claim by Barber that the capital commission last October endorsed a report which recommends government authorization to turn over the completed centre to Pan-Pacific for a dollar.

But that hasn't been

NDP wants Pan-Pacific group to bare holdings

passed by cabinet yet, Curtis emphasized.

"It is important in answering any question on this topic to make it very clear that there is no contractual arrangement between an organization known as Pan-Pacific and this government or the Provincial Capital Commission," he added.

Ald. Bill McElroy, one of Victoria's representatives on the capital commission, said today that the proposed agreement with Pan-Pacific to operate the convention centre is dead.

In recent weeks, the commission and the city — which will build a $1.7 million parkade and pay $200,000 a year towards any deficit — have been negotiating a draft agreement which specified Pan-Pacific as the operator of the centre, McElroy said, but the city has lost confidence in the group.

"Every time we've turned around they've botched up something else. How far do you let ineptness go?" said the alderman.

Former supporters of Pan-Pacific on city council and members of the business community at large have turned off the group, he added:

"The public has no faith in Pan-Pacific to operate the convention centre."

McElroy is promoting instead a management board composed of three city representatiuves, three provincial appointees and three people from the community at large.

Curtis said if and when an agreement to operate the centre is signed with some unspecified group, then he would consider asking the members for statutory declarations of their business and financial interests.

Concerning Pan-Pacific, Curtis added:"This is an organization which has had some involvement in the development of the conference centre but there is nothing from which I can ask someone to resign.

"That's not an excuse. I'm looking into it further."

Lane, president of the Pan-Pacific Conference and Trade Centre Society, was part owner of Hartwig Court, 1208 Wharf, from Jan. 15 until April, when he decided to sell to the other partners. The transaction was officially completed May 20.

He offered to resign as president of the Pan-Pacific group after conflict of interest rumors first started circulating in April, Pan-Pacific secretary John Ansell said Thursday, but the board of Pan-Pacific turned him down.

Lane denied his ownership constituted a conflict of interest.

"I don't control Pan-Pacific. I can't control the site. I couldn't control Hartwig Court," said Lane.

He said whenever businessmen get together to do something, "there's always somebody looking for a conflict of interest, quote unquote. When a neighborhood group tries to do something they're called heroes."

Lane said he sold his share because it had been brought to his attention that he could be accused of "feathering my own nest."

He said he didn't make any money on the deal. The other partners in the original purchase bought him out, paying Lane 18 per cent interest for his $450,000 share, plus $1,000 for his legal and accounting costs for the four-month period.

"I asked the others to take me out," said Lane.

The other three partners were Cedric Steele Realty Ltd., owned by Cedric Steele, president of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce; Redonda Investments Ltd., owned by lawyer Ellis Achtem and accountants James C. Crawford and Donald O. Willows, and Elsie Elizabeth Siddall, wife of Victoria architect Bob Siddalle.

CFAX president Mel Cooper, a fellow member of Pan-Pacific, said Thursday when the directors of the body learned in April that Lane had acquired a share of the property, they were concerned it could be construed as a conflict.

"It was suggested that could be viewed as a conflict even thought it was an after-the-fact situation."

He referred to the fact that the site of the convention centre had already been determined the year before and that Hartwig Court was placed for sale on the open market.

"I think probably he (Lane) didn't realize how sensitive it was. He's used to buying and selling property," said Cooper.

"It was brought up at a time when there was some criticim being thrown at Arne."

The board of Pan-Pacific told him of the problem. "No matter how you slice it, it'll be perceived as a conflict," Cooper said the members told Lane.

"Then he said 'Fine, I'll eliminate the conflict'."

"We didn't have any big argument over it."

It would have been a different case if Lane had been involved in purchasing Hartwig Court before all the decisions regarding the site had been made, Cooper added.

Victoria Mayor Bill Tindall said today when he first heard of the reports that Lane had an interest in Hartwig Court he asked him directly at a meeting on April 21. Lane told him no. By this time Lane had agreed to sell his share but the agreement was not made final until May 20.

The mayor said he didn't refer to a possible conflict of interest, as reported elsewhere this week.

"I'm quite certain I didn't try to interpret whether there was a conflict of interest. My statement was I had asked Lane if he had an interest in that building and he said no.

"No, I don't think I was misled at all. It's not up to me to interpret any possibility of conflict of interest for anyone else. It's my view that's Arne Lane's — not problem — but concern.

"As far as I'm concerned I'm quite comfortable with the fact I've been told mos emphatically by the president of Pan-Pacific that he does not have an interest in Hartwig Court.

"I fail to see really what the accusations or suggestions are based on as far as conflict of interest is concerned."

The legal details of the purchase of Hartwig Court are somewhat complicated.

On Jan. 15, a right to purchase the property from Diversified Holdings Ltd., developer Hans Hartwig's company, was registered on the title at the Land Registry Office in Victoria in the name of Kingsley Enterprises Ltd.

This B.C. company was incorporated last August.

On a Notice of Directors form filed Jan. 2 with the B.C. Companies Office, the new directors of the company were listed as Steele, Ellis Achtem, Elsie Elizabeth Siddall, and Ernest Lane, all of Victoria.

Achtem said today the filing of Ernest Lane's name was a mistake that originated in his office and that the document should have listed Arne Lane, for he was actually a director from the beginning.

A secretary, who no longer works in Achtem's office, made the initial mistake by copying the wrong Lane amd his address out of the phone book, the lawyer said.

Achtem admitted the error also slipped past him as he was signing a large number of papers.

The lawyer said the original shareholders in Kingsley Enterprises were Cedric Steele's realty firm, Elsie Elizabeth Siddall, Redonda Investments Ltd. and Shadee-Lane Ranch Ltd.

The last-named company's directors are Arne Lane and his wife Jean. Shadee-Lane is an extra-provincial company first incorporated in Alberta in 1966.

Experimental plane draws the crowds

A trophy-winning Victoria-built experimental plane has been drawing curious crowds at the Mayfair shopping mall this week.

The aircraft is on display to help raise funds for the Canadian Museum of Flight and Transport.

Museum society member Ron Stone says the aircraft has brought comments like: 'Which way does it go? Is it a real airplane or a model?"

The questions are understandable.

The tiny, swept-wing, aircraft with rudders on its wingtips and elevator on the nose, has an insect-like look about it.

The Pegasus is a vest-pocket-sized, two-seater sports plane built by civil engineer Norm Ross, 43, from a design spotted in Popular Mechanics magazine by co-owner Gerry Finnigan, 35.

Stone said it has proven a sure drawing card for the museum's Victoria section, which is campaigning for a home for vintage aircraft preserved by its members.

To help raise cash, people who visit the display are being offered a chance to buy fund-raising tickets in a draw for flights in a restored Second World War P51 Mustang fighter, a flight in a Waco or Finch trainer, flights in a Cessna 150 and two trips on a Vancouver Island Helicopter June 8 at the Victoria Flying Club.

Also on show at the mall are displays of Second World War aircraft components.

Ross just returned from a California airshow where his plane won the award for the best home-built aircraft.

Last year the VariEze design was judged grand champion at the prestigious Oshkosh, Wis., airshow, largest of its kind in the U.S.

The plane is made largely of glass fibre and has foam-reinforced spars.

It has virtually no electrical wiring except for about 20 pounds of copper moulded into the structure.

The Pegasus weighs only 650 pounds, about half the weight of an ordinary light plane and its 100 hp Continental engine flies at up to 322 kilometres an hour, with a 1,609 km range and a 181-kilogram payload.

But it has to be seen to be believed.

the weather

Unsettled weather continued overnight across the province. Considerable cloud was reported along the coast while generally cloudy skies and isolated shower activity was reported from the interior. A disturbance moving southwards along the Rockies is expected to keep skies generally cloudy over central and eastern portions of the province today and also give scattered showers or thundershowers to the area. Cooler air is following the disturbance but should modify as it moves southward. Western areas of the province will see varying amounts of cloud and sunshine as cloud associated with a disturbance over the northeastern Pacific is carried southwards down the coast. Generally cloudy condition are forecast Saturday as the disturbance advances down the coast.

Province offers to buy homes facing flood

ROGERS
. . . hazard rated high

The provincial government has offered to buy out about 80 homeowners in the small community of Garibaldi, 80 kilometres north of Vancouver, whose homes are in an area which geotechnical experts say could flood.

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers announced the program following the release of a report detailing the possibility that a massive rock collapse flowing into the Daisy Lake Reservoir could force the dam to break and flood the area. There also are concerns that the rock slide could flow directly at the homes.

The threat to the Garibaldi area is posed by a 400-metre cliff called the Barrier, five kilometres east of the community. A panel of geotechnical experts has concluded that a catastrophic 1885 rock flow from the Barrier could re-occur and that the endangered area should not be further developed.

The wave studies also indicated that reducing the Daisy Lake water level by two metres — which B.C. Hydro did earlier this week — would provide an interim safety measure.

Rogers said there is no suggestion the Barrier is in imminent danger of collapse, but monitoring of geological features will be continued.

He said the government will not force homeowners to sell, "but of course they will be advised of the potential danger that exists."

The program could cost the government $7 million if all homeowners decide to sell, he said.

Rogers also said that at present there is no plan to compensate persons who own undeveloped land in the area. Development has been prohibited in the area since concerns about the stability of the Barrier arose in the early 70s.

Rogers said there is no threat posed to the larger community of Squamish, because if there is an overtopping of the Daisy Lake dam, most of the water would be dissipated before it reached Squamish.

Maiden run to Rupert

VANCOUVER (CP) — The refurbished ferry Queen of the North began its maiden run from Port Hardy to Prince Rupert Thursday after a $7.5-million facelift.

During the past six months, the old Queen of Surrey was gutted and almost entirely rebuilt to prepare it for the 20-hour journey up the north B.C. coast.

The ferry has spacious lounges, a cocktail bar with a dance floor, a 70-seat television and movie theatre and cabins with showers.

The ferry will leave from Port Hardy on northern Vancouver Island every other day during the summer.

In the off season from October to May, the Queen of the North will make two round trips a week between Tsawwassen and Prince Rupert.

Cost of taking an average-sized car is $60.

Invasion of privacy

VANCOUVER (CP) — Lie detector tests are an invasion of privacy unless they are used by police as part of a criminal investigation, says Kit Rigg, president of the B.C. Civil Liberties Association.

Rigg's comment followed reports that welfare recipients who report the loss or theft of benefits are being told by police to take the tests.

Attorney-General Allan Williams has promised to look into the matter and one complaint has been referred to the provincial Ombudsman's office.

Rigg said Wednesday there are several studies which show lie detectors are not that accurate.

However, Harold Stevenson, a former detective-sergeant with the Vancouver police department who now runs a private polygraph test firm, said the machines are 92-per-cent accurate under laboratory conditions.

But he said the polygraph is just a measure of clearing innocent persons and once investigators believe a suspect has been incriminated by the test, they still must gather evidence.

Stevenson said persons administering lie detector tests should be licensed by a government agency after passing stringent examinations.

Stevenson said most of his work comes from lawyers, private investigators and insurance firms. He also works with unions in internal matters and in cases where employers attempt to fire an employee for theft.

Allan Roger, legislative counsel for the attorney-general's ministry, said there is no provincial legislation governing the tests or the use of test results.

The government has been mulling over the question of polygraphs since 1975 but has not yet come to a decision.

Welfare aged get bus passes

VANCOUVER (CP) — Elderly clients of the human resources ministry should have unlimited bus pass privileges, the Greater Vancouver regional district decided Wednesday.

The board also rejected what it called provincial government blackmail in insisting that the scheme for unlimited-use bus passes be dependent on exempting three Surrey gas stations along the Surrey-Langley border from the regional district's three-cents-a-gallon gasoline tax.

Gas station operators inside regional district boundaries have complained they face unfair competition from dealers outside the district who do not have a surcharge. Langley decided that it would fund transit operations assumed by the district from B.C. Hydro through property taxes rather than the gasoline surcharge.

Regional district staff estimated exempting three border stations would cost the district $100,000 annually.

Bill Vander Zalm, municipal affairs minister, said in Victoria that the district has the power to help the station owners.

He said the provincial government can expand boundaries and jurisdictions but only the district could reduce its own size.

However, he said he would probably proceed with the unlimited bus passes.

Alan Emmott, district chairman, said Vander Zalm has agreed to buy 28,000 human resource ministry passes for $60 each, $10 more than had been offered for passes which would have been limited to non-peak use and would only cover one of three zones into which the district is divided.

"I don't want to pose a threat of any sort to any senior holding a pass," he said.

No easing of rent pinch expected before 1982

VANCOUVER (CP) — Provincial rentalsman Jim Patterson expects no relief before 1982 in the rental housing market shortage.

"And it's unfortunate the provincial government hasn't clarified its policy on rent controls or housing," he told a service club meeting Thursday.

Patterson said the general public is not clear about the provincial rent control policy and the provincial and federal rental housing policy.

He said more than half a million people rent their living quarters in B.C., but probably fewer than 1,000 landlords and tenants know or understand the law that regulates rentals.

"It is unfortunate there is this lack of clarity on rental housing production policy or policy to provide incentives for rental housing. But it is significant that the province is willing to address the rental problem on their own."

Meanwhile, militancy among landlords and tenants has increased noticeably over the past few months, said Patterson, who predicts the situation will get worse with expected higher interprovincial immigration and little new rental housing construction under way.

Victim of stabbing

RICHMOND (CP) — The body of a nude woman with stab wounds in her throat was found by two fishermen Thursday on the north bank of the Fraser River's south arm here.

An RCMP spokesman said the woman, believed to be between 17 and 20 years-old, has not been identified and police are seeking public help.

BCAA picks new leader

VANCOUVER (CP) — Victoria Daily Colonist publisher Richard Bower has been elected president of the B.C. Automobile Association, the BCAA announced Thursday.

Bower, a BCAA director since 1965, has served on many BCAA committees and has represented the association federally on national motoring issues.

Nobody else to blame

A convention centre is still a good idea, one which could greatly benefit Victoria's tourist-dependent economy.

Despite this, the project may now face further delay, perhaps even abandonment. What went wrong? The answer, ironically, is found in the actions of the same people who worked so hard to give Victoria the centre in the first place.

The centre's proponents, led by the then-cabinet minister Sam Bawlf, chose a prime waterfront location as the site. It took a while for the import of this decision to be recognized by the public. Ald. Robin Blencoe and former mayor Peter Pollen — strange allies indeed — began to complain privately and then publicly.

It seemed like carping to the centre's proponents, but gradually many Victorians began to be concerned that the loss of part of the Inner Harbor waterfront was too high a price to pay for a convention building.

It is hindsight, of course, but if the centre had been proposed for almost any other downtown site, it probably would have received virtually unanimous support.

Now another controversy has erupted, this time involving one of the centre's main proponents, Dr. Arne Lane.

Lane is president of the Pan-Pacific Society, the group of businessmen who put much of the proposal together and who hope to take on the management of the centre.

Lane, it turns out, was until earlier this month, also one of a four-member partnership that had bought the property adjacent to the proposed convention centre site, Hartwig Court.

Earlier this spring, when questions arose about the suitability of the site, Lane, as president of Pan-Pacific, was in the position of actively promoting the waterfront location and decrying detractors. At that time he was one of the owners of the adjacent property. That property, a building which provides space for small retail outlets, would clearly benefit greatly from the flow of convention traffic next door — not just as all downtown business would benefit from the spending of conventioneers but much more directly.

There is nothing illegal in the Hartwig Court business venture, nor in Lane's promotion of the waterfront convention centre. His involvement does not, however, show good judgment when such a sensitive public project is involved.

Already the matter has been raised in the legislature, and calls have been made for a proper inquiry by the Provincial Capital Commission.

All of which means that a good idea is once again swirling in uncertainty because of the misjudgments of its strongest proponents.

Test case

A curious discrepancy has arisen in the controversy over the policy of the Vancouver city police force to give lie detector tests to welfare recipients who report that their money has been lost or stolen. The issue arose earlier this week when a woman complained that she didn't like being considered a likely liar just because she was receiving welfare. She pointed out, quite correctly, that no other crime victim is required to take these tests, and that the policy is discriminatory.

Officers from the Vancouver city police say that they give the tests because of strict ministry of human resources requirements that all such theft reports be verified.

Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy and her staff say they never issued any orders that would require the police to give the tests to any victims of crime.

Perhpas a lie detector test could settle the matter.

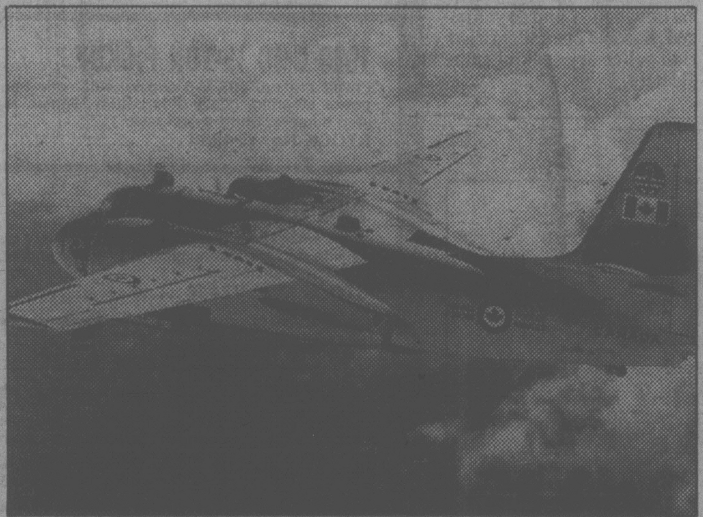
On guard — at 200 feet



Canadian Forces' trackers on patrol for marine border jumpers.

Blazing over the whitecaps and swells off the west coast of Vancouver Island at 200 feet in a Canadian Armed Forces' Grumman Tracker wasn't quite like the helicopter raid by Duke and the boys in the movie Apocalypse Now. No loudspeakers blaring classical music and no shooting, but the sun was at our backs (unintentionally).

The chitchat between pilot Major Ted Gibbon, the co-pilot and the radar watchman crackled through the earphones in the white and red-striped helmet, their voices clearly discernible above the drone of the twin-prop engines.

"There's maybe 40 or 50 in a cluster," said the radarman, trying to count the tiny dots on his orange radar screen.

"Okay," said Gibbons as he banked the tracker to make another run at the fleet of fishboats working the Swiftsure Bank off Port Renfrew. "I'll line us up with the freighter in the distance and you count the boats on the right and I'll count left."

"Roger," said the co-pilot.

Numbers noted

Forty-two salmon trollers were sighted in that particular spot, and the number was noted.

Between the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Cape Scott on the north end of the Island, there were two or three more clusters of 30 to 40 boats. As well, there were the loners, fishermen miles from any settlement or other fishboat, out bobbing in the swells, working their gurdies and living the life that is the envy of so many nine-to-fivers.

We were on a fishing patrol, the results of which are submitted to the federal fisheries department. VU-33 squadron based in Comox flies 10 to 15 such patrols a month, half of which take in the south coast, the other half involving overnight trips to the north coast and the Queen Charlotte Islands.

"At one time," says Gibbons who was dressed in a dark green flight suit, spanking white turtleneck, leather gloves and bug-like sun shades pulled down from his helmet, "the fishermen thought we were spying on them. Big Brother, that sort of thing."

I acknowledged his comments by pressing the footpedal beneath my seat that activates the plane's intercom system. Leaving your foot on the pedal is a no-no, as I found out when all three men turned and glared at me. It jams all transmissions inside and outside the aircraft.

"But now most of the fishermen have come to realize," he went on, "that we're really on the same side and can make a contribution to maintaining the resource." If it makes the fishermen feel any better, a radio scanner inside the aircraft monitors the marine emergency frequencies.

At one time it appeared that the aging Grumman Trackers were headed for the auction block, where many companies have picked them up cheaply for use as forest-fire water bombers. They were first commissioned in the late 1950s, designed primarily as anti-submarine aircraft and stationed on aircraft carriers. But since Canada no longer has an aircraft carrier, most of the trackers have been retired.

Of the few that remain, three are stationed in Comox. The bomb bays have been filled with fuel tanks, although the wings can still be equipped with air-to-ground rockets.

As the quirks of history and political decisions would have it, Grumman Trackers and their crews are finding that they have new roles to play off both the west and east coasts. Thousands of dollars have been spent on the Comox Grummans to update navigational equipment, the most important of which is a little white computer known as Omega.

Canada's declaration of a 200-mile fishing zone gave the Grumman a new lease on life. With increased interest in protecting Canadian waters from border jumpers and pollution violators, and in giving better search and rescue protection, the Omega system has given the VU-33 fly-boys the capability of pinpointing the location of any ship or vessel. In fact, the new equipment means that prosecutions have a better chance of succeeding because Omega data is admissible in court.

In short, off our west coast anyway, somebody is standing on guard for thee. American tuna or salmon fishermen, or any of the foreign fishing fleet trying to slip across the border without permission, might end up on the radar scope of a grey aircraft that hasn't yet appeared on the horizon.

Pollution violators present special problems and require the use of more mundane equipment — the ordinary camera. Unless a ship can be caught in the act of pumping oil overboard, the captain can always say he was just sailing through the slick. However, it's hard to argue with a photo. If the Americans start shipping Alaska crude through the Strait of Juan De Fuca, VU-33 is ready for the worst.

Red tide

Cruising down the east coast of the Island at 160 knots, through Johnston Strait and Discovery Passage below rain clouds caught in the mountain tops on each side, we kept an eye out for red tide reported in the Alert Bay-Campbell River areas. The plankton bloom that had killed one person earlier in the week wasn't visible.

On a similiar mission two weeks ago, the crew was involved in the rescue of two fishermen from a sinking boat. They're nicknamed a utility squadron for obvious reasons.

Weathered travellers often say that flying involves hours of boredom and moments of sheer terror. However, a five-hour toddle around Vancouver Island at 200 feet, is to say the least, inspiring. No doubt people on the water contemplating a violation of Canadian law will also find VU-33's beefed up capabilities inspiring, if not down right unfair.

Time Reagan detailed policy

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's early victory in the battle for the Republican presidential nomination gives him many advantages over his Democratic Party opponent.

It will be 50 days before he is actually nominated in Detroit, and 80 days before the Democrats choose his opponent at Madison Square Garden in mid-August — plenty of time to deal with his major problem.

This is that, despite his conclusive primary election victories, even many of his most enthusiastic supporters don't really know where he's going or who's going with him. Now he has a chance to clarify both points.

In these next 11 weeks, Reagan has other important opportunities to unite his party while the Democrats are scrapping with one another, as usual, about their platform and the rules of their nominating convention.

Good sport

Reagan has already organized party rallies to pay off the campaign debts of his defeated Republican opponents. And nothing consoles a defeated candidate or brings him to the side of his conqueror more than getting financial help from the winner to pay off the bills of the loser.

Also, Reagan's early triumph will give him money and energy both of which he needs, and enable him to mobilize the considerable talents of his party, choose the strategic arguments against President Carter, define serious statements of policy, and prepare the tactics and amiable one-liners for the coming television debates, which may in the end be decisive.

In this sense, time is a critical element, and the question is how Reagan will use it to present a coherent policy, choose a vice president and Cabinet that will impress the voters as an alternative to the Carter administration.

Reagan is now clearly in the Republican driver's seat. He is a master of the arts of television. He could be, and may very well be, the most persuasive political figure on radio and television since Franklin Roosevelt. He has read his lines in the primaries better than anybody else, but the presidential election is something quite different.

For Reagan has no new lines to read or persuasive policies to offer — at least so far. He knows that the voters are bored with Carter, bored with Carter's promises and blunders, bored with the paralytic struggle between the White House and the Congress. In this sense, he is Chairman of the Bored. He is counting on the failures of Jimmy Carter rather than on the policies of Ronald Reagan.

The surprising thing about his primary victories is that even the people who wish him well and want to get rid of Carter, wonder what would happen if Reagan won in November.

"Outside California," Fortune magazine reported in its May 19 issue, "not many businessmen know Reagan. They worry about his inexperience and reputation for jingoism....

"Some executives question his intelligence and judgment.... "

Fortune magazine does, however, give Reagan credit for choosing good assistants, for being a pragmatist rather than a right-wing ideologue, and above all, for being a sensible and decent man. Others differ, not about his decency, but about his competence.

"His defenders," says Donald D. Holt in Fortune, "believe that Reagan's weaknesses would be of little account in his chosen role as Chairman of the Board. In that role, they say there's no need for 16-hour days and mastery of every detail.

"Twenty-five years ago, Dwight Eisenhower played the part, and he is the President Reagan admires most ... Reagan's presidency might therefore start with New Dealish hoopla, and then progress smartly — to the 1950s."

Role models

It may be that these are Reagan's models — a dramatic Roosevelt in the first hundred days, and a cautious Eisenhower, delegating most work to his Cabinet, the rest of the time. Eisenhower certainly believed that no president ever measures up to his task or the people's expectations, since the task is much greater than any man's mind.

That may very well be true of Reagan as well, but we don't know, for he has won the nomination without telling us what he would do about most of the critical issues before the republic.

He does, however, having swept the Republican field so soon, now have a chance to collect his thoughts and organize a team that will win the confidence of the country. So far he hasn't done so, but he has almost three months for the resolution of this problem. How he uses or abuses that time may make all the difference between his victory or defeat.

CRD a farce

I wish I had taken my kids! I wish I had taken a whole classroom of kids! It was a lesson in democratic government, as the directors of the Capital Region District deliberated and acted on laws and resolutions which affect our lives and our livelihoods.

On the board meeting agenda for May 14 was consideration of bylaws 702 and 704, for the rezoning of open space at the corner of Aldeane and Sooke Road in Colwood. A public hearing had brought out a number of serious objections to the rezoning and this was to be the board's opportunity to react. Mr. Drummond, the director for Colwood, had been the only director at the hearing, but minutes of it had been given to all directors. I felt quite assured that anyone who read those minutes would realize that the matter of rezoning recreation and institution land to allow for apartment blocks required considerably more thought and discussion.

My first doubts occurred when Director Tipton from Metchosin, a member of the local planning committee, appeared to have difficulty staying awake while Chairman Campbell briefed the board on the Tillicum centre issue. Here was an issue of major legal and financial concern, and the directors listened like sheep (some quite drowsy sheep) as Mr. Campbell told them what he had decided to do on the region's behalf.

Second doubts appeared when one director voted in favor of two clauses of a motion and then indicated that he really didn't know what motion he was voting on. Mind you, the motions were read, voted on, and passed so quickly and without discussion that it was difficult to follow the process. Fortunately, the directors had copies of the motions and resolutions before them and they madly leafed through the pages as they passed each law.

My assurance that the directors had all discussed and considered the laws they were acting on, perhaps privately before the meeting, dissolved when one director attempted, in vain, to delay the democratic process to give himself time to read a particular motion. Ten seconds later he voted in favor of the motion. A very fast reader!

At 2:30, the board began to consider a series of bylaws and resolutions. I had been told that first reading was just a formality, but that second, third and final readings were the times when directors really discussed and deliberated on the bylaws. By 2:35, Bylaw 644 had been rescinded, Bylaw 656 had received second and third reading, and Bylaw 678 had received final adoption. No discussion, no questions asked, and only one sheep had voted nay.

Time for Bylaws 702 and 704. The directors turned the pages to the minutes of the public hearing. Director Drummond moved second and third reading of the bylaws! Obviously public objection to the rezoning had been overruled by some divine insight. Director Sturrock questioned why the planners had opposed the bylaw. A member of the planning staff answered that they found the wedge of land to be inappropriate for the proposed 70-unit apartment block and that several serious problems would have to be overcome. Director Drummond then gave a hint of his insight, citing the need for apartments in the community, apparently no matter where they may go. Motion passed unanimously at 2:40. It had taken five minutes of the board's valuable time!

This is ridiculous! The Capital Region Board is a farce. A 250-name petition means nothing to them. There appears to be only two ways of catching their attention. Write to the provincial minister of urban affairs and the local MLA, and once again have the provincial government correct a mistake made by the board. The other way is to form a community group, and use the force of organized public pressure and media coverage to embarrass the directors into responsible government. — Warren Wolfe, 3001 Charlotte Drive.

French heritage

Thank God the people of Quebec have not abandoned this country to whose exploration and discovery their ancestors contributed so much. Let us never forget those men — La Salle, Joliette, Marquette, Radisson and Groseilliers, the coureurs du bois and the rest, who opened up this continent.

Let us remember too the distinguished contribution the French have made to Canadian politics and in the area of all the arts. Their separation would have been an irreparable loss. We appreciate their generosity and tolerance in remaining.

But this is only the first step on the road to a united Canada. Let us hope that our representatives can now meet in a spirit of equal generosity and tolerance.

The difference between a deep commitment to the just needs of one's own province, and a selfish determination to grab every possible advantage regardless of the consequence to others is wide and perilous.

God grant them wisdom. — Adeline Fraser, 404-118 Croft Street.

Quebec needs 'another team'

By WILLIAM JOHNSON
The Globe and Mail

Rene Levesque . . . caught in negotiations bind

QUEBEC — Premier Levesque is in a bind. The loss in the referendum has put his government in an untenable position. Only an election, now, can give the Parti Quebecois the moral authority to govern beyond the next few months.

The situation brought on by the May 20 vote is entirely different from that in 1976 when the PQ came to power on a platform of providing "a good government." Then, constitutional change was on nobody's priority list. Prime Minister Trudeau wanted to patriate the constitution along with whatever constitutional changes could gain rapid approval from all first ministers. However, the premiers were opposed.

Premier Robert Bourassa called a quick election on the issue of patriation, but no one would take him seriously and the election was fought on other issues. The PQ hived off its constitutional position from the other election concerns by proposing a referendum on that issue alone. The PQ was elected on a platform of bread-and-butter issues, and neither constitution nor language was emphasized.

But now the referendum has set off a commitment to constitutional change across the country. Within the past month almost all the provincial premiers have committed themselves publicly to change. The three federal parties have declared their commitment to urgent change. There is even talk of an all-party federal approach. Jean Chretien is off on a quick tour of the provincial capitals to capitalize on the mood for change.

For nearly two decades, Quebec called for basic change, but the rest of the country wasn't ready. Now, for what is likely to be a brief period of a year or two, the readiness is there in other provinces to negotiate. But is Quebec ready?

Opinion polls during the referendum campaign showed that most of those proposing to vote no and at least a third of those voting yes wanted renewed federalism. But can it be obtained under the PQ government?

It's difficult to imagine Rene Levesque negotiating a realistic constitutional package with his old enemy Pierre Trudeau.

The PQ has a platform for a Quebec from which the federal government has been eliminated. It has no policy for re-dividing powers between Quebec and Ottawa. Nor is it conceivable that the PQ could come up with a realistic policy.

Now the government spokesmen talk of defending "the traditional positions of Quebec" at any future constitutional conference. That is purely a dodge to justify being in power even after the PQ's raison d'etre has been solemnly rejected in the referendum.

The "traditional positions of Quebec" is an expression used for propaganda purposes. It is mostly a myth. For instance, Jean-Paul L'Allier, then Quebec's communications minister, published in 1971 a green paper on communications in which he claimed for Quebec over-all control of communications. That is now referred to as one of the traditional positions of Quebec, although that position is less than 10 years old and has been rejected by Quebec's elected members in Ottawa.

It's not enough to collect every demand ever made by any Quebec government, put them on the bargaining table as "Quebec's traditional positions" and insist on getting all as a condition of settlement. That is not bargaining, it is an ultimatum. It's a formula that would doom constitutional negotiations to futility.

If the PQ wishes to be the bargaining agent for renewed federalism, it should publish a white paper on renewed federalism in which it puts forth the principles and policies that it would pursue during negotiations. It should then submit that policy to the electorate for approval.

The time for negotiating constitutional change is now. The people of Quebec must be given the opportunity to choose the negotiating team and the constitutional platform that will be theirs in the great, coming round.

It would be a betrayal of their interests if the PQ were to put off elections for another year in order to cling to power and to prove that renewed federalism is impossible.

The significance of the referendum vote is that it's time for another team to be given a chance.

STRAY FEATHERS

Harold Hosford

It was just a little sign, no bigger than an ordinary street sign, but its message was enough to temporarily change my plan for the morning. It simply said, in white letters on a green background, Nature Centre.

I had been on my way north along Pat Bay Highway, a date with Beaver Lake foremost in my mind, but the sight of that sign made me brake the car quickly and turn down Ralph Street, in the direction the sign indicated. Beaver Lake was forgotten; I was on my way now to Swan Lake.

Swan Lake, and its little complex for interpreting nature has, for reasons I cannot discover, been neglected by me. Now, thanks to a timely reminder, I had a chance to make right some of that neglect.

Not too many years ago Swan Lake was the victim of a more serious kind of neglect, the kind that might have seen its slow death. Today, thanks to the efforts of naturalists and environmentalists — and to some thoughtful members of the Saanich council — Swan Lake has obtained a reprieve; I say reprieve because nothing is forever, particularly anything that stands in the way of the kind of helter-skelter thinking that goes with some kinds of development these days.

But I hadn't turned in to Swan Lake to rehash the birth pains of a good idea; I was there to see and, hopefully, enjoy the results of those pains.

First, to my slight annoyance, I found that the nature centre itself — the old building that houses the teaching and interpretative facilities — was closed. It's only open during the week.

Undaunted, I struck out along the trail. Keeping to the right — that way lay the lake — I found a set of panels which explained in easily understood language the rather complex geology of the place.

After a brief stop to absorb some of the geology, it was on to a wooden "look-out" that jutted into the lake and which gave an excellent view of the whole overgrown shoreline. Then it was back to the trail again, which now began working its way west and south in the start of a pleasant walk that would take me completely around the lake.

Now in open grassy fields, speckled with daisies, in willow thickets with their resident Yellow Warblers, in patches of cattail where Red-winged Blackbirds "tchucked" nervously, and in tangles of willow, maple, and osier, where Bewick's Wrens held forth on the advantages of being Bewick's Wrens, the trail led through the various offerings of Swan Lake. For one long stretch it even crossed the lake where, in late May — and, I suppose, for a few weeks into June — the walker will be challenged by the cob of a resident pair of Mute Swans.

It is a pleasant, easy trail that makes few physical demands. Some wet spots, reminders that Swan Lake is a different place in winter, keep you alert but offer little impediment to an enjoyable walk.

At every turn something new attracts your eye. It might be the bare trees — as bare as winter — thanks to the work of the "worms", those little green caterpillars that have been devastating deciduous trees hereabouts for several years. It might be an old, abandoned barn where a family of Barn Swallows have taken up residence. Or it could be a Pied-billed Grebe doing its remarkable impersonation of a submarine submerging.

If you fancy flowers, the yellow water lilies are thick around the lake, and easily seen from the "look-outs". Or the red osier, their insignificant greenish-white florets making up in profusion what they lack in flamboyance. And just starting are the showy purple flowers of goatsbeard — soon to become gigantic "dandelions".

It took me less than an hour to walk the trail, and that hour included a lot of side-trips and diversions.

Later, passing that little green sign again, this time back on track for Beaver Lake, I tossed it a silent thanks. I'd be seeing a lot more of it, and Swan Lake.

Mobil gets pushy with its 'message'

PHIL KERBY
The Los Angeles Times

Freedom is messy. The problem is that it is abused. Not by you and certainly not by me, but by all those other folks.

I am often instructed in these matters, as well as being entertained, by Mobil Corp., which scrimps enough money together to publish frequent newspaper ads telling us all how to behave.

The tone is magisterial and the message is clear: Don't press your luck, buster, or you may lose your freedom. The inference is plain that Mobil, if sufficiently exasperated, might repeal the U.S. Constitution.

Mobil has been upset before by the vagaries of the news media. Recently, the corporation was fairly seething about, of all things, a television drama called Death of a Princess, a film inspired by the 1977 executions of a 19-year-old Saudi princess and her young lover on charges of adultery.

Death of a Princess is a meld of fact and fiction — more fiction than fact, say its critics. The Saudis complain that the film contains "many inaccuracies, distortions, and falsehoods" and are upset because it has been shown in Great Britain and the United States.

The Saudis, having great pools of oil, have many needy friends, among them the U.S. government and, more important, Mobil. Mobil's indignation about the film exceeds that of the Saudis themselves, which is odd. Of all the atrocities going on in this world, a mere TV program, even if distorted, would not seem to rank high on the list.

Mobil sees it differently. "We all know," said Mobil in its finest Chautaqua-circuit prose, "that in the United States our Constitution guarantees a free and unfettered press. However, implicit in that guarantee is the obligation on the part of the press to be responsible . . . The public will have to decide whether a 'free press' is acting responsibly if it presents a fictionalized story of 'events' and thereby demeans another nation's religion and possibly jeopardizes U.S. relations with that nation."

Then followed a stern, parental warning. "Congressional appropriations have made possible the television structure which helped produce . . . and will disseminate the show." (That was a reference to the Public Broadcasting Service).

Mobil went on: "We are not suggesting that congressional grants to public television should contain substantive restrictions . . . We know, however, that other nations may not understand how one branch of the government may deplore or regret a film offensive to a friendly country while another unwittingly supports it financially."

Mobil, unwittingly, scored a direct hit. Authoritarian nations don't understand freedom, which suggests that Mobil may have been directing its advertising efforts to the wrong market. A few ads on freedom placed in Saudi newspapers might help clear up the confusion.

Mobil is in a strategic position to accomplish this worthy purpose as one of four companies affiliated with the Arabian American Oil Co.

U.S. public officials might assist this good cause by being less apologetic about the First Amendment.

One oddity impressed me. There have been more expressions of horror over the showing of the film than over the executions of the princess — a girl of only 19 — and her lover, who was reported to have been beheaded. Their deaths were real, not fiction.

Young, old and aging fast

OLD: You are named John or Mary, got married in June, and can still rhyme "honeymoon" with "Joon" without wincing.

AGING FAST: You are named Dirk or Linda, have just decided that a divorce is more trouble than it's worth, and wish the Beatles would get together again.

YOUNG: You are named Jason or Jennifer, are living together out of wedlock because you can't afford the punitive income tax on working married couples, and don't think of sushi as raw fish.

OLD: You miss the Queen Mary.

AGING FAST: You treasure an old snapshot of yourself being teargassed the day the cops routed the S.D.S. from the physics lab.

YOUNG: You remember the good old days when "Charlie's Angels" still had Farrah Fawcett.

OLD: Wouldn't trust a computer as far as you could throw one.

AGING FAST: Never trust anyone over 30 — oops! — over 45.

YOUNG: No nukes!

OLD: You are shocked by evidence that Franklin D. Roosevelt was unfaithful to Eleanor.

AGING FAST: You find it incredible that Theodore Roosevelt never engaged in premarital sex.

YOUNG: You doubt that anyone engaged in sexual activity before 1975, except when fully clothed.

OLD: In your dreams, you own a Packard.

AGING FAST: . . . you met Jack Kennedy.

YOUNG: . . . you own a Princess telephone.

OLD: "When I was a kid, you could buy an ice-cream cone for a nickel."

AGING FAST: "Remember that summer we flew to Europe and hitchhiked all the way from London to Lake Como on just $50 a day?"

YOUNG: "I'll need $25,000 a year to start, but first let's talk about the retirement plan."

OLD: You want your children to have a better life than you had.

AGING FAST: You want your child to have it just as good as you had it, except for the really heavy drugs.

YOUNG: You wouldn't mind having children if you could afford a house to put them in and if the government rewrote the law to make children a profitable tax shelter.

OLD: You are watching another made-for-TV movie about World War II, and all the soldiers are wearing hair in the thick, long-locks, Los Angeles style popularized by local TV news-show anchormen. You become intensely irritated because whoever made the movie was obviously too young to know that all GI's in World War II wore crewcuts.

AGING FAST: While watching the same movie, you are sickened by the tendency of American mass culture to glorify war instead of showing it like it is — namely, as an evil that can make a mess of the most expensive hairstyling.

YOUNG: You find the movie very boring if you are male, but continue watching to get some tips about how to shape your hair for a sexier look; if female, ditto.

OLD: When you think of the great evils of the 20th century, what you have in mind are the Great Depression, Adolf Hitler and Josef Stalin.

AGING FAST: What comes to your mind, on the other hand, are irrelevance, conformity, the Establishment, Lyndon Johnson and disco.

YOUNG: And what comes to yours? Cholesterol, pollution, nuclear meltdown, the Ayatollah Khomeini and the skyrocketing Social Security tax.

OLD: Until this moment, you haven't thought about Warner Baxter in 20 years.

AGING FAST: You think it quaint that anyone should ever have thought about Warner Baxter. This is because you have forgotten that you haven't thought about Sam the Sham and the Pharaohs in 10 years.

YOUNG: You feel very smug in this department because you still think about Johnny Rotten and Sid Vicious every now and then. But just you wait a few months, youngtimers.

Help 'problem' boy, judge tells professionals

By MIKE HUGHES

The lack of residential treatment centres for problem juveniles in B.C. resulted Thursday in a renewed call for professionals to help a 16-year-old boy while keeping him in the community.

Judge Lawrence Brahan of the Victoria family court gave the professionals six weeks to come up with another program for the boy who was in court facing two charges of breach of probation.

The boy is said to be totally unable to control himself once he loses his temper.

In March, he was given an extended one-year probation and ordered to do 100 hours of community work when he was in court for wilful damage and causing a disturbance.

The boy was allowed to stay with his mother but under a number of conditions, including a weekly report to his probation officer and attendance for 16 weekends at an Outward-Bound style camp in Metchosin.

The court was told the boy failed to show up at the camp on two weekends this month.

On one occasion when he did report, the court was told the boy, who has been described as highly volatile, went into a rage over an incident with an instructor.

Told by Frank Healey, the boy's child care worker, that the only alternative would be a residential treatment centre, Brahan said there are no such centres in the province.

Brahan said the professionals in this case are back to square one as treatment program for the boy shows every sign that it is not working.

He said they are going to have to go back to the drawing board and come up with another program.

The case will be reviewed again July 16, he said. Meanwhile, the order to attend Metchosin camp is suspended although the other probation conditions are to continue.

At one point, Brahan told the boy that a great deal of time and money is being spent to help him and that he is going to have to contribute some effort as well.

"You're no primma donna. If you want to spend the rest of your life in prison that's your decision."

Brahan told the boy if he has made up his mind "that we are all a bunch of marks, tell us now and we will stop."

The boy said he didn't refuse to go to the camp but he doesn't get along with the staff and ends up in a lot of trouble.

Brahan suggested that he seek more help when he needs it from the professional team that is working with him.

The judge also ordered that Hugh Hayward, who specializes in adolescent counselling, be brought back on the case to complete an assessment and work with the boy.

Dave Borgstrom, the boy's probation officer, told the court the professional team working with the boy is split down the middle on whether he should be kept in the community or sent to a residential treatment centre.

Japanese ships mark first visit

Two ships of the Japanese Self-Defence Force will visit Esquimalt June 8-13 to mark the centennial of the first Japanese naval vessel to visit Canadian waters on June 10, 1880.

They are the training ship JDS Katori and the destroyer JDS Okigumo.

Under the command of Rear-Admiral Osuke Fukai, the ships are on a training schedule for newly-commissioned officers from the Japanese Self-Defence Force Military Academy.

The two ships will join the Esquimalt-based destroyer-escort HMCS Restigouche in a sailpast at 10 a.m. June 8 off Beacon Hill Park.

The Japanese ships will anchor at Royal Roads and will be illuminated after sunset.

At 8 a.m. June 9, they will fire a 21-gun national salute to Canada and a 13-gun salute to Rear-Admiral Michael Martin, commander maritime forces Pacific.

The salutes will be returned from the Black Rock battery by members of the Canadian Forces Fleet School.

The arrival ceremonies at 8:30 a.m. will include a musical welcome by the Naden band.

Later in the day Admiral Fukai will call on Lieutenant-Governor Henry Bell-Irving, Premier Bill Bennett, Victoria Mayor Bill Tindall and Esquimalt Mayor Ken Hill.

On Tuesday, he will lay wreaths at the Victoria Cenotaph and the naval cemetary in Esquimalt.

The Japanese ships will be open to the public from 1 to 4 p.m. on June 10 and 11 in the dockyard of CFB Esquimalt.

A joint Japanese and Naden band concert will be held at 12:30 p.m. June 11 in Centennial Square.

Words not enough says teachers' fed

VANCOUVER (CP) — There is a growing centralization of education policy in Victoria and teachers are not involved in important decisions affecting curriculum, the president of the B.C. Teachers' Federation said Thursday.

Al Blakey was delivering the federation's report card on Education Minister Brian Smith during a meeting of the group's representative assembly.

Blakey said Smith has said a lot of nice things but teachers will not be satisfied with words and the minister must support his statements by consistent action.

He criticized Smith's policies on standardization of text books, administrative techniques and social studies curriculum.

Smith had no comment on the report.

Medical reasons listed for one maternity unit

By BRENDA DALGLISH

The medical evidence in support of concentrating perinatal services in one hospital facility far outweighs the emotional arguments for maintaining a facility at Royal Jubilee Hospital.

So says Dr. Don Carlow, medical director at Victoria General Hospital, in a presentation he prepared on the advantages of a single facility for the Capital Regional District's hospital commission.

The CRD has been under fire from critics who say the current obstetric facility at Jubilee should remain.

Citing at least six independent studies, Carlow told members of the VGH board of management Thursday that having one facility handle all perinatal services (except in emergency cases when patients can be treated at the nearest hospital) improves the perinatal mortality and morbidity rate.

The term perinatal, he said, refers to the period from immediately before conception through pregnancy, labor and delivery to post-partum care for the mother and whatever attention the infant needs in the days following delivery. Carlow said the term appropriately suggests the emphasis the facility proposed for the new VGH on Helmcken Road will put on caring for the mother and child through the whole period, not just the days immediately near birth.

About 3,000 deliveries are performed in Victoria each year — about half at both city hospitals.

The authorities cite 4,500 births a year as the optimal number for a facility and recommend that any metro area with less than 2,000 births per hospital amalgamate their services, said Carlow.

In particular, having a single facility allows nurses, anesthetists, and all support staff to specialize in infant and child care.

Staff at all levels benefit from the specialization, he said.

Also, a single facility will allow education and diagnostic programs to improve, said Carlow.

He also pointed out that a single facility will also be able to have the best possible equipment.

"I believe we have the ability to improve perinatal mortality by about 35 per cent and, although it's more difficult to measure, we can do equally well in morbidity."

In Canada the perinatal mortality rate is about 13 per 1000 births. In Scandinavian countries, where they encourage the concept of regionalized facilities and have a healthier approach to life, the mortality rate is about eight per 1,000 births.

The term morbidity refers to damage done to the infant either before birth, during delivery or shortly afterward and it's as great or even greater a concern that death.

But the public shouldn't think that all the scientific evidence presented in favor of the facility means that it will take a coldly clinical approach to delivery and child care.

On the contrary, said Carlow, the facility is planned so that it will better respond to the needs of families and babies.

The facility will make every effort to have a relaxed, home-like environment, he said.

Doctors who have obstetric privileges at either city hospital will be allowed privileges at the new VGH, he said, and the residency program at both hospitals will not suffer.

Those concerns were raised by Dr. Scott Wallace who is campaigning against the single facility.

Furthermore, said Carlow, even the argument that it's unfair city residents should have to travel to Helmcken Road to have a baby or receive child care is unjustified by statistics.

He said an origin of patients study showed in 1976 that only 31 per cent of VGH's patients came from Victoria or Oak Bay, while 69 per cent came from outlying areas such as Saanich, Esquimalt, the unorganized territories and other areas which would be closer to the new hospital site.

50-MD panel to choose abortions

The medical staff at Victoria General Hospital has taken steps to end the abortion controversy at the hospital.

But, Dr. Don Shorting, chief of the medical staff, told a board of management meeting Thursday, this doesn't mean abortions will again be performed on a regular basis as they were for several years before this January.

At that time a new therapeutic abortion committee began turning down the vast majority of applications.

The hospital's board of management, acting on recommendations from the medical staff, agreed to a new system of choosing doctors to serve on the abortion committee.

Shorting said a pool of about 50 doctors will be established and four members will be chosen each month to serve as that month's abortion committee.

Dr. John Cooper, a member of this year's controversial committee, was recommended by the medical staff as the permanent chairman of the 1980 committee.

Shorting said he cannot predict what kind of decisions committees chosen at random may make.

He said it's possible that one month the committee will take a liberal approach to abortions and the next, will refuse the majority of applications.

He said he believes the pool of 50 doctors who've indicated they are willing to serve may lean to the pro-abortion side.

"It was surprising that when we surveyed the doctors to see who would be willing to serve on the committee some of the fellows who do the majority of the abortion operations chose not to sit on it," he said.

The hospital board is working on a policy concerning abortions but Shorting said he does not expect it to be an effort to instruct medical staff.

Stays at VGH below average

Victoria General Hospital has an excellent record for discharging patients quickly and a good showing for discharging them without any hospital-acquired infections.

Executive director Jim Fair told hospital board members at their meeting Thursday that VGH patients are being discharged, on the average, after 6.2 days.

This compares very favorably with the Canadian rate of 8.8 days as the average length of stay and the United States rate of 7.3 days.

Lengths of stay statistics are calculated by removing long-term care statistics.

Board members were particularly pleased with the statistics because the shortage of hospital beds in the Greater Victoria area is eased if patients can be treated quicker.

"Mind you, they're still bleeding when they go home," quipped Cathy Mountain about the hustle.

The rate of hospital-acquired infection at VGH is well within the Canadian average, too, said Dr. Don Carlow, the medical director.

The computerized system of watching infection patterns indicates that 3.5 infections per 100 patients develop at VGH. The Canadian average is 3.5 to 4 per 100, said Carlow, so the hospital is doing an acceptable job.

Hospital staff attempts to control infections by a number of methods, including careful monitoring of practises and materials that cause and reduce infections.

"Hospitals are risky places for developing infections but I think the infection surveillance program we've launched is starting to pay off," he said.

New York

Stock prices showed a modest loss today on word of a record drop in the U.S. government's index of leading economic indicators.

The government reported today that its leading-indicators index, which is designed to detect future economic trends, took an unprecedented 4.8-per-cent drop in April.

Wall Streeters had been looking for a sharp decline, but advance estimates had been in the three-to four-per-cent range.

Analysts said the slump in the indicators, which came on the heels of a 2.6-per-cent drop in March, raised new concern among investors over the potential severity of the recession.

Gold mining stocks, which often benefit from economic uncertainty, made some broad gains. ASA rose ⅞ to $43⅜ and Homestake Mining picked up 1½ to $52½.

London

The London stock market was lower near the close of quiet trading today.

The Financial Times index slipped 1.6 to 416.2.

Golds were higher but equities eased.

Canadian issues were also lower.

Pension assets worth $42.6B

OTTAWA (CP) — The book value of assets held in trusteed pension funds was an estimated $42.6 billion at the end of 1979, up $7.4 billion over a year earlier, a Statistics Canada survey showed.

Trusteed pensions plans, administered by corporate or individual trustees, are the most dominant type in terms of assets, contributions and number of members.

The survey, for the last three months of 1979, showed that bond holdings continued to account for 49 per cent of all assets, up slightly from 48.6 per cent from the fourth quarter of 1978.

The share of assets in mortgages dropped to 12.9 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1979 from 13.5 per cent a year earlier while equity holdings were virtually unchanged at 19.2 per cent.

The $4.7 billion classified as miscellaneous holdings, comprised of cash, guaranteed investment certificates, commercial paper and other investments were worth 11.1 per cent of the total, was unchanged from 1978.

High interest rates a necessary evil?

LONDON, Ont. (UPC) — A prominent Vancouver economist has called on the Bank of Canada to resist public pressure for cheaper loans and instead move to stem the decline in Canadian interest rates.

"We will all heave a sigh of relief that we can get cheaper mortgage money and cheaper automobile loans (with lower rates)," said economist Michael Walker, director of the Vancouver-based Fraser Institute.

"But that does not change the fact that lower interest rates at this time are the first step toward rekindling of the fire of inflation — and we've already got quite a blaze."

Speaking to the London Chamber of Commerce Wednesday, Walker said the central bank's current policy of lowering interest rates indicates the federal government is willing to live with double-digit inflation. He urged the institution to slow the decline immediately.

Failure to keep rates up will mean a replay of recent financial events within 18 months and put Canada's economic future in jeopardy, he said.

"If the monetary policy of the 1980s proves to be a refurbished replica of the 1970s, then we face inflation rates that will average ten percent over the decade."

Massey forced to shut doors

BRANTFORD, Ont. (CP) — Massey-Ferguson Industries Ltd. is closing its North American operation for three months starting in August, the company announced Thursday.

A company spokesman said the shutdown will affect almost 7,000 hourly-paid workers in Canada and the United States. Of these, 3,240 are in Brantford, 1,848 in Toronto, 1,250 in Detroit and 600 in Des Moines, Iowa.

Darwin Kettering, general manager of North American operations, said the shutdown is because of slow demand for farm machinery throughout North America.

He said all of the company's operations are affected by the agricultural recession.

"Throughout the industry, sales of farm tractors in the United States in April were down 40 per cent, compared with April of last year; sales of combines were down 45 per cent. In Canada, they were down 22 per cent and 54 per cent respectively."

Kettering said that while there are some signs of encouragement, the company does not expect "a significant improvement in demand this year."

Leading Indicator up for February

TORONTO (CP) — The Leading Indicator of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce increased in February by 0.16 per cent, the second consecutive monthly increase.

The bank says the indicator was heavily influenced by movements in the Toronto Stock Exchange 300 composite index.

"Strong activity, particularly in oil and gas stocks, has tended to distort the composite index as an indicator of general business prospects."

Three components of the indicator increased in February: the index of stock prices (up 8.91 per cent); the real value of non-residential permits (up 4.39 per cent); and the real value of new orders in manufacturing components (up 0.76 per cent).

Four components declined: the real value of residential building permits (down 1.9 per cent); average hours worked weekly in the manufacturing sector (down 1.52 per cent); U.S. index of leading indicators (down 0.44 per cent); and the real value of narrowly defined money supply (down 0.18 per cent).

The index for profit in manufacturing was unchanged.

Via Rail profits just $422,000

MONTREAL (CP) — Via Rail Canada Inc. reported a slim after-tax profit of $422,000 for 1979, four times its 1978 level, but small compared with federal passenger train subsidies of $232 million.

In an annual report released Wednesday, government-owned Via Rail reported expenses of $335 million, with 69 per cent of income covered under federal contracts and $103 million in passenger revenues. Miscellaneous income brought $600,000.

Via carried nearly six million passengers in 1979, up more than five per cent from a year earlier and up 34 per cent from three years ago, when it began its takeover of intercity passenger services operated by Canadian National and CP Rail.

Bill clips Hydro land powers

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm today said he will bring in a Land Use Act to control land-use decisions by municipalities, government ministries and all Crown corporations including B.C. Hydro.

Under it, every Crown corporation and ministry will have to spell out their short- and long-term land use plans for each region.

Their plans will be made public, rather than kept confidential as Hydro and other Crown agencies have done in the past.

In effect, it is a municipal freedom-of-information act.

The act will virtually eliminate planning functions at the regional district level and will divide the province into seven large economic regions.

The proposed bill would take precedence over existing legislation such as the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority Act, which critics say has virtually made Hydro a power unto itself in the province.

The legislation will go far beyond earlier hints by Vander Zalm that his bill would cut down on red tape for municipal residents and developers.

However, that aspect remains in the bill.

It contains dozens of changes in municipal development approval systems, municipal planning and the ways in whivh the provincial government is involved in planning and land-use decisions.

All municipalities will be required to pass procedural bylaws outlining how the public can do business with municipalities.

Further, a provincial appeal board will be established to settle disputes between individuals and municipalities or between municipalities themselves.

The bill also would permit vertical zoning in B.C. for the first time.

This is a type of zoning, popular in many European and eastern U.S. cities, which allows construction of highrise buildings that contain shops, offices and apartments under one roof.

Vander Zalm said the act must pass through two more committee stages and scrutiny by legislative coounsel before it is presented to the legislature in a few weeks.

"I'm hoping there won't be too many changes," he said.

The minister also said he does not expect much opposition to the bill.

Municipal officials set code on ethics

The Municipal Officers Association of B.C. has approved a self-policing code of ethics preventing any member from dealing in land in his municipality.

"This code is something we have been working toward for three years," said Harald Hall, immediate past president.

"We want to remove municipal officers from any suggestion of a conflict of interest."

He said the code, which passed Thursday at the conclusion of the association's two-day convention at The Empress, specifically forbids members to own any property other than their own residence in the municipality where they are employed.

If, under unusual circumstances, a second property is acquired, the member must declare the circumstances in public at a council meeting.

Members are also forbidden to disclose any information which obviously should be kept confidential.

Any member violating the code could be dismissed from membership in the association.

While the association does not have any power other than to take away membership, this action could be the signal for further action by some other authority.

Hall said the property question is the key element of the code.

He said municipal employees should always be above suspicion and the best way to achieve this goal is to take the tough line that no property can be owned other than the private residence.

"The employee is obviously entitled to own his own home but in ordinary circumstances that should be it."

The association consists of 450 municipal administrators, treasurers, city clerks and their deputies in 169 municipalities and regional districts in the province.

Hall said there was no single incident that sparked the code.

"We were simply concerned about the professional image of our members and a growing number of questions about possible conflict situations."

The question first arose in 1977 and it has taken three years to achieve a satisfactory code.

The idea was discussed at length with Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm who supported the concept, Hall said.

"We are a rapidly-growing association and we felt we had to make a declaration about our responsibility to public office."

The code will be policed by the association.

MLA pay up 6.4%

Members of the B.C. legislature were notified Thursday they are getting a 6.4-per-cent pay increase, retroactive to Jan. 1.

This is their annual adjustment for cost of living increases, equivalent to 75 per cent of the annual increase in B.C.'s average weekly wage.

An MLA's salary increases to $22,344 from the present $21,000. The annual tax-free expense allowance goes up to $11,172 from $10,500. That puts the MLA's total income at $33,516.

The additional stipend of $24,000 a year, paid to cabinet ministers, remains unchanged.

Ouellet with Mayor Bill Tindall

Better mail service ahead: Ouellet

By AL FORREST

Postmaster-General Andre Ouellet Thursday asked Canadians to give the government mail service a second chance.

"Significant improvements are coming in the 1980s," he said in an interview.

"There is no need for private enterprise to get involved in the postal service."

Ouellet, who was in Victoria to launch a new 17-cent gardening stamp, was commenting on a Chamber of Commerce campaign to get Ottawa to let businessmen compete with the post office in mail delivery.

The campaign began in Winnipeg and has been supported by chamber branches in a number of cities, including Victoria.

"The post office can do the job," Ouellet said.

"We ask the people to wait and see what we can do."

An example of the improvements, he said, is an experiment being conducted June 17 between London, Ont., and Toronto in same-day delivery systems.

"When this is in place you will be able to send birthday greetings to your mother in some other city and she will get it on the same day."

Called Interpost, the system involves electronic transmission of messages from city to city. The print-out would get special delivery treatment.

To begin with, Interpost will be mainly of interest to businessmen and government officials, but it will also be available to all citizens.

It will be useful for special-occasion messages.

Eventually, systems like Interpost will be used on a regular basis by everyone.

Because of electronic advances the delivery of mail will be speeded up during the 80s.

This did not mean the end of letter carriers.

They would still be required in large numbers for many years to come.

Ouellet said the 80s have begun with labor contracts in place for both sorters and letter carriers and the post office is looking forward to becoming a Crown corporation this summer.

"With this stability we are in a good position to move forward. There will be experiments and improvements in the service."

He urged the chamber to be "a little patient."

Ouellet was in Victoria at the invitation of the Visitors Information Centre, which had suggested the new Canadian stamp should be launched in the B.C. capital, instead of Ottawa, because its growing reputation as the City of Gardens.

Ouellet and his wife arrived late Wednesday night and stayed at The Empress.

At noon Thursday in a Causeway ceremony he presided over the hanging of the first flower basket of the season in Victoria. (The rest will not go up for awhile because weather has been cool and it is rushing the season).

He was also installed as an honorary citizen of Victoria in a hatting ceremony.

He kneeled on a cushion while being installed by LOVE, the Loyal Order of Victoria Enthusiasts, and he was kissed on both cheeks by several ladies in Victorian costume.

He smiled gamely through the ceremony and later quipped: "The Liberals are on their knees in Victoria."

Ouellet presented a folder of garden stamps to Mayor Bill Tindall, who the minister noted, was celebrating his 59th birthday.

Later, at a reception in the Crystal Garden, Ouellet presented similar folders to other local mayors and to Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt, who was representing the provincial government.

At the reception, 200 first-day covers, stamped envelopes pre-cancelled with the May 29 date, were handed out to guests.

The postmaster-general signed about 180 of them. The covers have added value to collectors when they have the postmaster-general's signature.

"AFTER ALL, THEY ARE YOUR HOSPITALS"

Obstetrics and Paediatrics MUST be provided at the three General Hospitals in our community.

ESQUIMALT, OAK BAY, SAANICH AND PENINSULA COUNCILS . . .
MANY COMMUNITY ASSOCIATIONS . . .
HUNDREDS OF MOTHERS AND THOUSANDS OF RESIDENTS . . .
TWO HUNDRED DOCTORS . . .

CANNOT ALL BE WRONG

And yet . . . the Regional Hospital Board plans to close down all services for pregnant women, babies and children at Royal Jubilee and Saanich Peninsula Hospitals when the new Victoria General Hospital opens at Helmcken Road.

THESE PLANS MUST BE CHANGED

The Capital Region, stretching from Sooke to Sidney, with 250,000 residents, needs obstetric and paediatric services at each of its community hospitals. Mothers and children must have rapid and easy access to these services. Doctors must have equally rapid access to the patient. Fast and easy access would be impaired for many people if the only obstetrical unit for the whole region were located at Helmcken Road. In obstetrics a few minutes delay can make a vital difference.

This is a public issue of enormous importance to Capital Region residents, and we undersigned doctors feel compelled to speak out and arouse public concern, so that a serious error in hospital planning can be averted. We see no logical or medical reason to close down obstetrics and paediatrics at Royal Jubilee and Saanich Peninsula hospitals. It makes even less sense to locate the proposed single unit for the whole region, miles from the centre of population it is to serve.

We appeal to all residents of the Capital Region to protest. Write or phone Mayor William Tindall, chairman of the Regional Hospital Board, at 385-5711 or 388-4421.

Write or phone your mayor and council; and the Hon. Rafe Mair, Minister of Health, at the Parliament Buildings, 387-6480. Write to local newspapers. Petitions are available at your doctor's office and at Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Mail to Dr. Scott Wallace, c/o Royal Jubilee Hospital.

I support Obstetrics and Paediatrics continuing at Royal Jubilee and Saanich Peninsula Hospitals.

Before the judge

A 29-year-old man charged with rape, assault causing bodily harm and possession of a dangerous weapon elected trial by Supreme Court judge and jury Thursday in Victoria provincial court.

Wayne Stanley Cecile, 2853 Quadra, was charged in connection with an incident Sunday at a Fifth Street apartment.

Lawyer Robert Pearson, standing in for Peter Freeman, said Cecile declined to apply for bail at this time.

Judge Lorne Pearce remanded Cecile until Monday to fix a date for a preliminary hearing.

A group of women was in court for Cecile's two appearances and extra security was posted in the afternoon in case of a public demonstration.

A 25-year-old man who grabbed a waitress in a doughnut shop by the throat was given a suspended sentence and 40 hours of community service work.

Alan Robert Lyness, 1508 Wark, changed his plea to guilty on a Dec. 2 charge of common assault.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Lyness was at Honey's Donuts, 1325 Government, about 12:30 a.m. and was abusive to customers.

Employee Lisa Locke warned Lyness and then went to telephone police. Lyness followed her into the kitchen, grabbed her by the throat and ripped the receiver from her grasp.

Court was advised Lyness tried to apologize to the victim but was not able to contact her and had voluntarily attended at the Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Society for counselling.

Pearce placed Lyness on a year's probation and ordered him to complete the DARS program and to refrain from exessive use of alcohol during probation.

Pearce fined an 18-year-old $200 and warned that courts will not put up with persons altering driver's licences or applying for duplicates under false pretences.

James Brazier, 219 Suzanne Place, pleaded guilty to altering his driver's licence April 18.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Victoria police were on patrol on Dallas Road at 11:30 p.m. and checked Brazier, who produced two driver's licences.

Further investigation showed that Brazier went to the Motor-Vehicle Branch on April 10, 1979, and applied for another licence, signing a declaration he had lost the original.

Upon receipt of a second licence, Laughton said, Brazier altered the number 3337168 to 3397168 and changed his date of birth from Aug. 19, 1961, to March 19, 1960.

Pearce told the accused he was fortunate the Crown did not charge him with something more serious.

Fined for drinking-driving convictions were: Mark Andrew Cunningham, 20, of 2774 Ronald, $450; and Robert Charles Tiffany, 21, of 100 Crease, $400.

Last witness at pot trial

The last witness was heard and the last exhibit entered Thursday in Victoria county court in the longest criminal trial in the city's history.

All that remains now is for the defence and prosecution lawyers to start presenting their summations Monday and for Judge Montague Drake to give his charge to the jury.

Then the jury will retire to consider its verdict in the case of eight men accused of importing 33.5 tons of cannabis marijuana into Canada last May and possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking.

Thirty-nine witnesses were called by both sides and 107 exhibits entered. The trial has lasted 23 days so far, two more than the total for the previous longest trial.

The final witness was Michael Walter Butler, 28, of Westport, Wash., skipper of the pleasure cruiser Whitecap which sailed from Seattle May 17, 1979, carrying fellow defendants Jaime Marin, 38, of Marina del Rey, Calif., Paul Oscar Nelson, 27, of Seattle and Marina del Rey, and Albergipson Frasser-Afanador, 39, of Los Angeles.

Butler, who has worked as a fisherman, said in cross-examination he was not extremely happy about sailing a cruiser such as the Whitecap to the Alaska Panhandle.

He was not aware of problems aboard the Panamanian-registered, cannabis-laden freighter Samarkanda when the Whitecap left Seattle but he knew by the time they left Neah Bay, Wash., on the late evening of May 18 that they were to look for a place for the Samarkanda to make repairs and what her cargo was.

The Whitecap sailed about 40 miles off the west coast of Vancouver Island looking for a secluded place for the Samarkanda and eventually No Name Bay at the head of Sydney Inlet, 50 kilometres northwest of Tofino, was chosen.

Butler agreed the Whitecap carried groundsheets, tarpaulin, axe, Coleman stove, cookset, sleeping bags, jerry cans with coal oil, six white foam mattresses and a small shovel.

What else would you want for a campsite, asked Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald.

"I suppose those were essentials," replied Butler, who said they weren't planning to camp there.

Shown a box of charts and asked if those were what he had on the Whitecap, Butler sorted them into a smaller pile he didn't recognize, a larger pile he did recognize and two he was uncertain about.

Asked if there was any chart there giving details on waters in Alaska, he believed there was and pulled out one marked Dixon Entrance which was separated from the others.

He also said there should be two or three other charts but he didn't know if they were in the box.

The remaining four accused are:

Marco Antonio Lopera Penagos, 60, of Mellin, Colombia, captain of the Samarkanda;

William Francis Perka, 35, of Port Townsend, Wash., navigator;

William Terry Hines, 39, of San Rafael, Calif., engineer;

Stephen Earl Johnson, 34, of Port Townsend, radio operator.

Tokyo coal trip waits on CNR

B.C. coal executives have delayed plans to travel to Japan Monday to wait and see whether the Canadian National Railways decides to accept a B.C. proposal that it build a spur line into northeastern B.C. coalfields.

The executives want to reach an agreement with Japanese steel industry officials on a price for an annual total of 5.3 million tonnes of metallurgical coal the Japanese have tentatively agreed to purchase.

The coal companies need to have a firm freight rate — the amount paid to the rail company for transporting the coal to port — before they can negotiate, said Industry Minister Don Phillips, who is to meet with the coal company executives tonight.

The provincial government offered CNR the project after failing to get more than the $70 million offered by Ottawa to help British Columbia Rail build the 115-kilometre line, which will go to the coalfields south of Chetwynd, B.C.

B.C. has already indicated it will go it alone if necessary, but Phillips said he is confident that the CNR will build the line.

"They know it's a good deal," he said.

Salmon closure on Fraser

VANCOUVER (CP) — A chinook salmon run only half as large as expected has forced the federal fisheries department to close the Fraser River and adjacent waters to commercial salmon fishing.

Dr. W. E. Johnson, Pacific Region director general, said Thursday the closure, effective immediately, is an essential conservation measure needed to ensure adequate spawning escapements.

The 2,615 chinook caught by gillnet fishermen since the one-day-a-week fishery opened April 21 "is the lowest Fraser River chinook catch in ten years," said Johnson.

Employees kept off

Hospital employees won't be allowed to become members of the society which operates Victoria General Hospital, the provincial health ministry has ruled.

VGH chairman Alan Patterson said he has received a letter from the ministry, following a year of discussion, saying employees will not be allowed to join the Southern Vancouver Island Hospital Society.

Although Patterson said the ministry didn't outline its objections, it's thought they stem from concern that if a large number of employees were to join the society and vote as a block they could control elections to the board and therefore board policy.

The question arose when the SVIH society amended its constitution last year to allow hospital employees to join.

Victoria chosen for pipeline hearings

OTTAWA (CP) — Energy Minister Marc Lalonde promised Thursday to suggest to the National Energy Board that Victoria be the site of further hearings into a proposed tanker-pipeline route to bring U.S. oil along the B.C. coast.

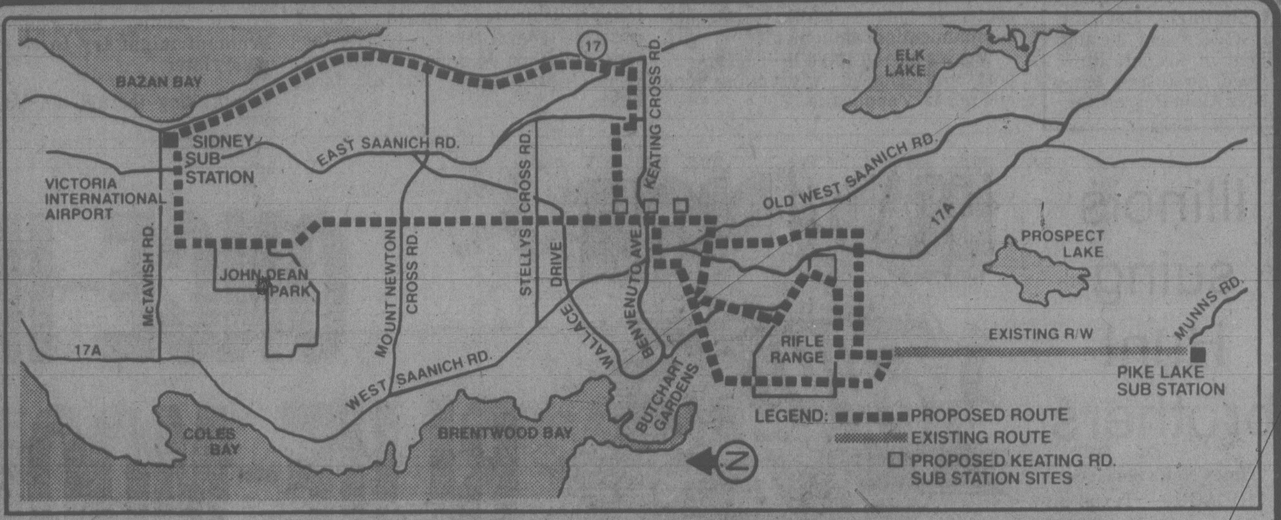
Lalonde was responding in the Commons to a question from Ontario Progressive Conservative Otto Jelinek (Halton) who wanted to know if the renewed board hearings would be held in the city which most would be affected by a possible increase in tanker traffic.

Lalonde stressed, however, that the board alone decides on where such hearings are held and acts independently of government opinion.

Jelinek was referring to the renewed hearings into a plan by the Trans Mountain Pipe Line Co. Ltd. of Vancouver to ship Alaskan oil south to the U.S. west coast.

A board decision on the proposal was deferred in February until the company could provide more a detailed environmental impact of its plan on Canadian marine environment.

The first round of hearings were held in Ottawa and then shifted to Vancouver.



OPEN HOUSE

SUBSTATION AND TRANSMISSION LINE INFORMATION WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1980 IN CENTRAL SAANICH

Proposed Substation Site and Transmission Line Route Location in the Saanich Peninsula Area

B.C. Hydro will hold an "open house" in Central Saanich for public information and discussion concerning a proposed Keating substation and a Pike Lake to Keating to Sidney area transmission line.

The expansion of Hydro facilities is necessary to serve growing electrical loads on the Saanich Peninsula. Transmission lines from Pike Lake to a new substation in the Keating Cross Road area will be needed by 1983. Additional transmission lines to the Sidney area will be required in the late 1980's or early 1990's.

The area plan shown indicates the approximate location of feasible alternatives for which public input is invited.

Additional data and more detailed mapping, as well as a brief report for public distribution, will be available at the open house meeting. Detailed maps can be viewed and the report can be obtained in the municipal halls of Saanich, North Saanich, Central Saanich, the Capital Region District Office in Victoria and B.C. Hydro's regional office at 4400 W. Saanich Road, Victoria, B.C. any time after May 26, 1980.

Ear, ear your honor

STRASBOURG, France (AP) — A man serving a 12-year prison sentence has sent his left ear to a judge in a ploy to be freed.

Maurice Locquin taped the ear to a letter urging a new trial on charges of armed robbery, the lawyer said.

U.S. selling arms-related gear to China

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chinese Vice-Premier Geng Biao heads across the United States today after arranging his country's first purchases from the U.S. of military-related equipment and technology.

With Geng at his side, Defence Secretary Harold Brown announced approval late Thursday of exports of a variety of military support items, such as air defence radar, transport helicopters and planes, trailer trucks, and communications equipment.

Brown also granted licences to export some technology with both civilian and military applications.

In addition, Brown said the U.S. government has approved the sale of computers and associated equipment for China's metal-refining and petrochemical industries.

The new moves are historic because they bring closer together two superpowers which were once enemies on the battlefield.

His talks with senior U.S. officials an apparent success, Geng was flying today to South Bend, Ind., for a tour of the AM General tactical vehicle factory and then to Colorado Springs, Colo., to visit army and air force bases.

From there, Geng will travel Sunday to San Diego, Calif., to inspect navy ships and activities before leaving for home.

Brown said emphatically that the arrangements do not include sale of "weapons systems or arms as such." Other defence officials said there is no change in the stated U.S. policy ruling out arms sales to China.

But a smiling Geng implied his government might try to change that policy later.

Speaking through an interpreter, Geng said he sees no possibility for such purchases now, "but I believe there may be such a possibility in the future."

The U.S. government will not sell any equipment or technology directly to the Chinese. The Peking government's representatives will negotiate terms and details with private U.S. firms, subject to licensing approval in some cases after contracts are reached.

Officials said the value of the purchases probably will run into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Brown spoke of the new arrangements as "part of a very long relationship" and Geng echoed Brown's description of the growing U.S.-Chinese relationship as a step-by-step process.

Brown said his hours of discussion confirmed that the United States and China continue to view the world situation, including the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, in similar terms. But Brown said the impending sale of military-related equipment and technology to China is "not directed at any other country," meaning the Soviet Union.

Illinois suing Hunt brothers

Times News Services

CHICAGO — Texas billionaire Nelson Bunker Hunt and his brother, William Herbert Hunt, were sued by the Illinois attorney-general's office Thursday for their part in an alleged multi-million-dollar swindle.

About 1,000 Illinois residents were victimized by the Cochiti Lakes land development scheme in New Mexico, Attorney-General William Scott said.

The suit names the Hunt brothers, who already face financial problems after suffering huge loses in the collapse of the silver market earlier this year, plus Hunt International Resources Corp. of Dallas, Tex., five other corporations and two other individuals.

"People were promised a lot of things (in the land scheme) that never happened or never could happen," Scott said.

In July, 1979, Scott filed a similar suit against the Hunts, their companies and several Colorado firms in connection with a 20,000-lot development in Colorado City. That suit is still pending.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed at congressional hearings in Washington Thursday that the Hunts will be able to hold on to their vast hoard of silver and buy still more under terms of the $1 billion bail-out loan package they have negotiated with a group of the nation's biggest banks.

Part of the loan money will be used bo buy silver under a contract the Hunts signed some time ago, Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker told the Senate Banking Committee.

Since last June, the Hunts have purchased at least 106 million ounces of silver, it was revealed in a Commodity Futures Trading Commission report made public by Sen. Donald L. Stewart, D-Ala.

The report is the first accounting of how much silver the Hunts collected in their silver buying spree. It includes only their purchases on the U.S. futures market, and does not count silver bought overseas.

Despite his severe financial setback in the silver market, Nelson Bunker Hunt insisted Thursday that the precious metal is "artificially greatly undervalued" and will leap in price during the 1980s.

$17,500 to Entebbe victim

NEW YORK (Reuter) — Air France has reached a settlement in a $1.5-million lawsuit filed here by a passenger involved in the June 1976 hijacking of one of its airliners to Entebbe, Uganda, an airline spokesman said Thursday.

The settlement was believed to be the first in more than 90 suits resulting from the hijacking, which ended when an Israeli commando raid freed the passengers after a week in captivity.

Lawyer Lawrence Goldhirsch said Air France had agreed to pay his client Murray Schwartz $17,500 of the amount he had claimed as damages from the airline's alleged negligence in allowing the hijackers to board the aircraft.

Schwartz' home town was listed as Encino, Calif.

Afghanis battle again

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (Reuter) — Heavy fighting involving Soviet-piloted helicopter gunships and bombers has broken out again in Afghanistan's eastern Kunar province, spokesmen for Moslem insurgents said Thursday.

United Nations officials confirmed the clashes and reported a fresh wave of refugees pouring into neighboring Pakistan.

In the Afghan capital of Kabul, sources reported an increase in insurgency against the Kabul government and said Soviet forces had suffered losses in at least six Afghan provinces.

In Moscow, a Soviet correspondent reported that Afghan forces had captured a key rebel hideout and seized a huge quantity of arms and explosives in Dushi, one of the main towns on the road linking Kabul with the Soviet border.

Kunar province, on Pakistan's border, was the site of the Soviet army's first big offensive three months ago against tribal-led guerrillas opposed to the Soviet-backed Afghan government.

Spokesmen for the insurgent groups based in Peshawar, capital of Pakistan's Northwest Frontier province, said the heaviest fighting was in the Pech Valley, a rebel stronghold.

The guerrilla spokesmen said the gunships and bombers, along with artillery, were pounding settlements to clear the way for tanks and other armored vehicles to move up the valley.

They said the helicopters were also patrolling the Kunar River, which runs the length of the province parallel with the Pakistani border, shooting at anybody who tried to cross.

The river is a barrier to insurgents moving from Pakistan or the eastern edge of Kunar to help their comrades in the Pech Valley and to the west.

Germ weapon mishap reports correct: Soviet science writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Soviet science writer told Congress Thursday that 1,000 people died when wind blew an "infectious cloud" south of a secret Soviet germ warfare facility on the outskirts of Sverdlosk.

The writer, Mark Popovsky, testified that he learned of a Soviet bacteriolgical development program from scientists who worked on it. He said his information about the purported April 1979 incident at Sverdlosk came in a letter from Moscow sent "through the underground," reporting an epidemic after an explosion at a bacteriological compound:

"Residents within a very large radius of the military bacteriologican compound were vaccinated twice. The nature of the disease was not known but it was thought to be a very virulent form of anthrax."

Popovsky — author of Manipulated Science, a book on "the use and abuse of science in the U.S.S.R. — was before a House intelligence subcommittee investigating the alleged incident at Sverdlosk with a view to determining whether the Soviet Union has violated the 1975 anti-germ warfare agreement.

The anthrax epidemic was first made known by the United States at a meeting in Geneva of the signers of the international convention banning the development, production, and storage of deadly germ and chemicals.

"I maintain that the Soviet Union never . . . carried out its commitment to renounce bacteriological weapons," Popovsky said.

The Soviet Union has not denied an anthrax outbreak at Sverdlosk, but insists victims died of stomach or skin anthrax caused by infected meat.

"Plague, tularemia, tetanus, anthrax, and yellow fever were some of the infectious diseases worked on by Soviet experts at these secret compounds," Popovsky said.

Earler, U.S. state department officials reported that a Soviet military commander killed himself after hundreds of people died in the Sverdlovsk accident.

Reports indicated a "fairly large" number of male military reservists were killed in an explosion at a military installation housing a biological warfare laboratory, the officials said.

Military first to dump: probe

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The U.S. military dumped radioactive wastes, nerve gas and other highly toxic chemicals at Love canal and other sites near Niagara Falls in the early 1940s, New York state investigators said Thursday.

A preliminary report by a state assembly task force said the military-supervised disposals occurred before the dumping by the Hooker Chemical and Plastics Corp., focus of the current pollution crisis among the nearly 1,000 Love Canal families.

The report did not identify any new sites of toxic dumping, and most of the chemicals were already known to have been dumped in the area, although their source had been a mystery. But investigators said the military used dump sites in neighborhoods where residents, unlike the Love canal residents, have not yet been offered health studies.

Dunkerque drama replayed

RAMSGATE, England (Reuter) — About 35 small boats today set sail for the French port of Dunkerque to mark the 40th anniversary of the most celebrated military retreat in British history.

They belong to the strange flotilla of trawlers, yachts, barges, paddle-steamers and pleasure boats which helped to rescue more than 300,000 men from the Dunkerque beaches under heavy German fire in 1940.

The nine-day evacuation of the Allied troops, rescued against overwhelming odds after they had been trapped by the rapid German advance into northern France, still is remembered by the British with more emotion than any other episode of the Second World War.

Some of the boats which left Ramsgate today date back to the last century, including the schooner Alabama.

And they were scheduled to drop a wreath in the waters of Dunkerque in memory of the dead left behind on its beaches.

Trio ram truck across border

KLINGENBACH, Austria (AP) — A deaf-mute Hungarian suffered cuts and bruises today when he and two companions rammed a tractor-trailer through a Hungarian border checkpoint under a hail of bullets from Communist watchtower guards.

Officials said the man identified himself as Gabor Baksa, 20, and said he and friends he identified as Peter Ozsvath, 20, and Mihally Rudi 19, had stolen the truck in Budapest.

Initial reports by authorities that Baksa had been hit in the head by a bullet proved false. Baksa was treated at a hospital in Eisenstadt, about 55 kilometres southeast of Vienna.

Baksa believed his companions were also injured when the tractor-trailer overturned inside Austrian territory and that the two were forced back to Hungary by border guards.

Austrian officials and witnesses had said the two fled back across the border voluntarily and made no mention of Hungarian border guards being close to the vehicle.

Japan deports dolphin saver

TOKYO (UPI) — An American environmentalist was sentenced to six months in jail today for freeing 300 dolphins destined to be slaughtered by fishermen, and then was ordered deported because his visa had expired.

Dexter Cate, 36, of Hilo, Hawaii, was convicted of damaging fishing nets on Iki Island, 600 miles southwest of Tokyo, to free the trapped dolphins Feb. 29.

Contract Bridge — B. Jay Becker

Your right-hand opponent bids One Notrump, both sides vulnerable. What would you bid now with each of the following five hands?

1. ♠ KJ954 ♡7 ◇AJ82 ♣KJ6
2. ♠ AJ9 ♡AQ85 ◇KJ7 ♣Q98
3. ♠ AJ10983 ♡4 ◇10 ♣AQ983
4. ♠ QJ76 ♡KQJ983 ◇6 ♣AJ
5. ♠ AQ82 ♡3 ◇KJ94 ♣AJ87

1. Pass. It is much too dangerous to bid two spades with such a hollow suit and only 13 high-card points against a player who has 16 to 18 points and probably strength in every suit. You could run into a huge penalty if the next player had spade length and most of the missing high cards. A double of one notrump would be equally risky because partner might respond two hearts.

True, you have the values for an opening bid, but even so it's more prudent to invoke the fifth amendment and remain silent.

2. Double. Here you have a notrump bid of your own and your high cards are well situated over the opening bidder's high cards. There are not many high-card values left for the next two players, and you hope that partner has most of them and will pass. If he bids two of any suit, you should pass — since there is almost no chance for game.

3. Two spades. Here you have only 11 high-card points, but that shouldn't stop you from trying for a part score or game with such powerful distribution. A suit bid over one notrump strongly implies good distribution and reasonable safety, both of which you have.

4. Double. There is a genuine choice between whether to bid two hearts or double, and there are two factors that favor the double. First, if your partner passes for penalties, you will have no problem finding the right lead against one notrump doubled. Second, if partner responds two of a minor suit, you can then bid two hearts.

5. Pass. Again the safety principle applies, as in the first hand. A double might evoke a two heart bid from your partner and give you a king-size headache as well.

You sometimes have to pass as a matter of prudence, even though your inaction may result in missing your theoretically best contract. And so, while you may feel here that your side can make a part score in one of your three suits, the fact remains that it's too dangerous to investigate that possibility at this point by a double or an overcall. Your partner might bid hearts, and what would you do then?

The chance of making a game is remote, and it simply does not make sense to risk a large penalty when only a part score is at stake.

"Those old rose standards you want dug up," said Joe. "I'll do the job."

"Okay." His father nodded. "There's nearly sixty of them. What's your offer?"

The boy was ready. "I get 17 cents for each, and I'll do the lot in two hours."

"A deal." Tom chuckled. "But you pay a penalty if you exceed two hours. For the first minute over the time you pay a penny, two cents for the second minute, three for the third and so on, part of a minute counting as a minute."

So Joe started. But the job netted him only $8.10, so how long did it take him?

Hostage fate delayed in new Iran parliament

Times News Services

The new Iranian parliament is unlikely to debate the issue of the U.S. hostages until late July — a month later than previously expected — the temporary head of the parliament said Thursday.

"There are a lot of things to be done" before dealing with the fate of the 53 captive Americans, Yadolah Sahabi said in an interview with the official Radio Tehran.

Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Khomeini has said the parliament, or Majlis, must decide what to do with the Americans.

In a related development, a secret Pentagon critique of last month's aborted hostage rescue attempt charges helicopters were inadequately maintained, their pilots never practiced in bad weather and weather forecasters missed a 6,000-foot-high dust fog, it was reported today.

The Pentagon immediately denied the report by Scripps-Howard News Service, which said the critique was based on interviews by military experts with more than two dozen members of the aborted mission April 24.

Scripps-Howard reported the secret critique of the mission concluded major errors were made in planning, appointing commanders and executing the operation.

The alleged top-secret document said a key factor in the failure of the mission was the selection of Maj. Gen. James Vaught as its commander. The critique noted that while Vaught is an outstanding soldier, he lacks experience in planning operations involving several military branches — in this case the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines.

According to the critique, the crews never practised flying when they encountered bad weather such as sand storms in the American desert. The crews assumed that if they encountered bad weather in Iran, the mission would be cancelled.

Botha blames churches

Times News Services

JOHANNESBURG — Prime Minister Pieter Botha today accused the South African Council of Churches of financing unrest in the country, and there were new outbursts of violence by mulatto students protesting against the country's educational system.

The attack on the council, which has long been critical of the government's apartheid policies, was matched with a veiled warning to striking students that the government would respond to civil disturbances with its full force.

"During 1978, about 2.5 million rand ($3.2 million U.S.) was received from abroad, which was channeled by the Council of Churches to numerous bodies and projects with only one purpose — to promote unrest," the prime minister said.

Botha's accusation came five days after the council's secretary general, Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, and 52 other church leaders were arrested for trying to stage a protest march in connection with the school boycott.

At the same time, in Cape Town, youths in a mulatto township set up a barricade of flaming car tires that spread to neighboring buildings before dawn.

In a Johannesburg suburb, hundreds of Indian students invaded their high school to tear up exam papers and break windows.

In an effort to stem the school boycott, called to protest against the disproportionate amount of government funds that go for white education, the authorities Thursday flew 250 police reinforcements into Cape Town and placed anti-riot police on alert in other troubled cities.

In the Zimbabwe capital of Salisbury, meanwhile, riot-equipped police on Thursday clubbed black women, some carrying babies on their backs, breaking up the second demonstration in as many days against alleged brutality by the white-led force.

Pope arrives in France

Times News Services

PARIS — Pope John Paul II arrived in Paris today for a four-day visit, the first reigning pontiff to set foot on French soil since Pius VII was released from a Napoleonic jail in 1814.

The 60-year-old Pope — who with U.S. President Jimmy Carter and King Juan Carlos of Spain, has been nominated for this year's Nobel Peace Prize — was greeted at Orly Airport by Prime Minister Raymond Barre and French Primate Cardinal Francois Marty.

Vatican figures show more than 80 per cent of France's 53 million people are Roman Catholics but only 35 per cent of children from Catholic families go to mass regularly — a typical phenomenon the church faces in industrialized Western countries.

In 22 speeches and homilies in three days, the Pope is expected to appeal directly to French youth to help reverse this trend.

The Pope's departure from Italy was delayed 76 minutes by a blown-out tire on his brand-new, French-built Alitalia A-300 Airbus jetliner.

Before leaving for Paris, the Pope said he would be returning to France in July 1981 to attend the International Eucharistic Congress at Lourdes.

Looks innocent, but volcanic ash may be killer

Times News Services

The Mount St. Helens' ash feels like baby powder, but scientists fear it could cause silicosis — the dreaded scarred-lung disease associated with mining and other industries involving silica dust.

Scientists at Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory in Livermore, Calif., one of the best-equipped laboratories in the world for study of fine particles, said Thursday testing is still inconclusive but they warned that tiny particles of matter contained in the volcanic ash are "respirable" and jagged in shape.

If these tiny particles were to reach human lungs, the greatest health hazard would be silicosis, the experts said.

"There is nothing rounded," said chemist Richard Landingham. "Everything is all jagged, and the shape determines how it attaches to the various membranes in the lungs."

"We have found the majority of the material is in the one tenth to 10 micron size range," he added, "which is right in or near the respirable size range."

Some, though not all, analyses have found ash from Mount St. Helens to contain a large fraction of silica-based minerals.

Silica, an oxide of silicon, is found in many minerals, including quartz. Silicosis occurs from scar tissue formed in the lungs by irritation from trapped particles. Symptons, much like those of emphysema, may not appear for 10 to 20 years.

A geologist said today that glowing spots sighted within the Mount St. Helens crater could be lava pushing up and starting to rebuild the top of the mountain.

Airborne scientific observers reported they could see the glowing areas within the crater with the naked eye during the night.

The volcano remained quiet today although National Weather Service radar and Forest Service aircraft observations detected steam plumes rising to about 3,050 m above sea level at times.

Authorities suspended further aerial searches for 42 persons still listed as missing. Another 35 were known to have died in the violent May 18 eruption.

In addition to the 22 victims whose bodies have been recovered, at least 13 of the 55 still missing were confirmed to have been in the blast area when the mountain erupted with the force of an atomic bomb.

Officials said they did not want to add to the death toll with a possible crash of a search crew on the dangerous mountain which still contains the constant threat of more eruptions.

A ground party searching with the aid of a dog and some air support from Salkum, Wash., in Lewis County, planned to keep working for about three more days.

Although the May 18 eruption destroyed about $4.5-million worth of fish in Washington state, Canadian scientists say this country's fishing will not be badly affected — at least not this year.

More than 50 per cent of the Chinook caught off Vancouver Island's west coast by trollers comes from the U.S.

Now they're stealing the bulldozers

RCMP zero in on thefts of heavy equipment

The RCMP have launched a major public awareness program aimed at combatting thefts of heavy equipment which last year cost B.C. forest and construction companies as much as $25 million.

Cpl. Bill Van de Braak, head of a special squad investigating log and equipment thefts, said today his officers have visited every logging company on Vancouver Island in the past month to warn operators to take precautions.

Similar alerts are being issued throughout the province under the RCMP's Community Police Participation Program which started last June in Sooke as a pilot project.

Another program, Operation Provident, which encourages owners to mark their equipment is also being expanded.

Van de Braak said most thefts recorded in recent months have been in the Fraser Valley and the interior but there are fears the thieves are now eyeing the Island.

"This is virgin territory . . . you can almost bet they are going to start over here."

Van de Braak said most of the stolen equipment, which includes bulldozers and logging trucks, is apparently being shipped across the border where it can be sold for up to 75 per cent of the actual value.

Stolen B.C. equipment has been discovered in Houston, Texas and Georgia, Van de Braak said.

It's happened the other way around too. A bulldozer stolen in Washington State was recovered in Slave Lake, Alta.

Police also suspect some equipment is ending up in Mexico where the machines are being stripped down and the parts re-sold in Canada and the U.S.

U.S. authorities have estimated more than $250 million worth of stolen equipment rolled into Mexico from one Texas border crossing alone last year.

Van de Braak said there is evidence of organized crime involvement particularly in the southern states but he couldn't say whether it has extended into Canada.

He said the sheer audacity of the thefts has created alarm.

"When we found out what was happening we were just as startled as anybody," he said.

Recently a D-9 cat, worth more than $200,000, was stolen from a logging camp on the Queen Charlotte Islands. The unit was barged across the strait to the mainland and then placed on a low-bed truck and shipped south.

Last month four Kenworth logging trucks were stolen in the Fraser Valley. None have been recovered.

In another case, a company erected a high metal fence to deter thieves. The fence was stolen as well as the materials inside.

Thieves haven't tackled the very large pieces of equipment, such as D-10 cats which are worth $1 million each, or steel spars which cost $600,000, but Van de Braak said it is only a matter of time.

Van de Braak said some of the equipment is being stored in secret depots.

The FBI believe they have located one such depot on a farm near Seattle where a man has been stockpiling equipment in case construction starts on an oil pipeline across the northern states.

The problem for police, Van de Braak said, is a lack of any comprehensive registration system for heavy equipment.

Serial numbers aren't stamped on logging and construction equipment and that makes identification difficult, if not impossible.

Last week, for example, he said U.S. customs at Blaine stopped a truck with a load of four bulldozers believed to have been stolen in B.C. But there was no way of identifying them and the trucker was allowed to go.

The manufacturers of the equipment haven't helped matters, either.

Van de Braak said none of the companies are prepared to stamp identification numbers on their products.

There are two main reasons, he said.

One is the number would identify the year the unit was built.

Heavy equipment may take years to sell and when it is sold, it is sold as new.

Expensive equipment like this has been sold in the U.S.

The other reason was expressed by one major manufacturer in the U.S. who blithely told police: "Why should we do that? Every vehicle stolen is a new one made."

Van de Braak said the U.S. federal government has tried to get the companies to adapt a more responsible attitude, without success.

As a consequence, he said, it is left up to the buyers of the equipment to take preventive action.

But that poses new difficulties.

Special tools have to be used to stamp numbers on heavy steel plates and a method hasn't yet been devised to stamp numbers on light cast metal which many parts and smaller tools are made of.

The RCMP is now preparing a manual which instructs where owners should place the identification number on various types of equipment.

Van de Braak said a meeting involving FBI, RCMP, and customs agents is scheduled next month in Seattle to discuss the situation.

TOWN TALK

That bit of maple leaf bunting high atop Beacon Hill flagstaff has (barely) caught the eye of Art Hammond, who thinks it pales beside the magnificence of mountain-fringed Juan de Fuca Strait.

A "postage stamp size" ensign is just not good enough for the Pacific gateway to Canada, and Hammond thinks it should be replaced by a proper banner or an ensign.

"I feel we should have something a bit more impressive looking over Juan de Fuca Strait," he said.

Hammond has convinced the Victoria Village Squires, a barbershop singing group to which he belongs, to put up a new flag measuring 7½ by 15 feet, their gift to the city.

Between now and July 1 Hammond will be trying to organize an appropriate ceremony to mark the flag-raising Canada Day, something that might be associated with the nearby Mile 0 marker of the Trans-Canada Highway, the western approach to Canada, and national unity.

Ex-Victorian Val Wuorinen thinks he and his daughter may get themselves into the Guinness Book with their academic ways.

Six years ago Wuorinen, then 44, got his MA in geomorphology from University of Victoria. His 20-year-old daughter and fellow student Paula graduated that year with a BA then entered law.

Saturday the pair will be in the UVic academic procession again as Paula receives her LLB and her father gets his PhD after working six years on a geography dissertation.

His subject is timely: mapping total risks from natural hazards in an urban environment — the Saanich Peninsula.

"I chose it long before Mount St. Helens," Wuorinen said, more concerned at the time with the risk of Mt. Baker erupting. But he finds it not to be a hazard here.

Inflation is about to become a matter of life and death in B.C. Love will also be affected.

The provincial government is expected to raise the registration for births, deaths and marriages to $5 from the present $2, starting June 1.

That's an increase of 150 per cent.

Has the grey, dreary weather of the past few days made you think that winter has returned?

If so, perhaps you'd like to continue the seasonal theme with a singalong version of the Halleluiah Chorus from Handel's Messiah tonight.

The singalong will be the last item on a concert being given by the Hampton Orchestra, that musical group ranging in age from 14 to 87 and conducted by MLA Charles Barber.

The concert will begin at 7:30 p.m. at the Saanich Silver Threads, 286 Hampton.

Arthur and Phyllis Whittaker of 2741 Dalhousie will be the V.I.P.s of their municipality this weekend when they assume the roles of Mr. and Mrs. Tweedie at the Oak Bay Tea Party.

Selected by the Oak Bay Board of Trade on the recommendation of their neighbors, the Whittakers have been active in community work since they arrived from Britain in 1948.

Whittaker is conductor of the Oak Bay Senior Citizens' Centre's singalong group that visits local hospitals at least once a month. His wife is one of the group.

Says Mrs. Tweedie: "It's the happiest group in town."

You can't win them all but some days you can't win any.

That was the way it was for Salt Spring Island director Yvette Valcourt this week when she tried to get two motions passed by the regional board.

One was to provide filing cabinets for all directors.

That went down to defeat, with Ald. Bob Wright recommending she use a fireplace rather than a filing cabinet.

Valcourt also lost out in a bid to have copies of all correspondence affecting directors' areas sent to them.

Sidney mayor Norma Sealey noted the suggestion "doesn't make a hell of a lot of sense," referring to Valcourt's request "that this copy be mailed to the director by the same mail as it came in or went out."

Mayor Mel Couvelier of Saanich got it off his chest and out of the Capital Regional Board's ear on Wednesday.

He made a public apology to the board for his behavior at a meeting five weeks ago.

Couvelier noted the meeting was the first he had attended "since I left the room in some anger and I wish to publicly apologize to the board."

He had left in a huff during discussion of the Tillicum shopping centre with remarks to the effect that "regionalism can stick it in its ear."

It's a special night Thursday at Metropolitan United Church, 1611 Quadra.

Past and present members of the church choir will gather to honor a choir member of 50 years' standing.

Ivan Green, 303-240 Douglas, whose wife Kathleen and daughter Helen are also members of the choir, has been active in Metropolitan's musical life since June 1, 1930.

A church spokesman said Green, one of whose sons is Judge Fred Green of Victoria, has led the choir off and on for many years.

His voice is still in fine form and he still reads music and sings well although approaching his 80s.

Green was an active member of a church in Fairfield before transferring to Metropolitan United. He came to Victoria in 1912.

The recognition ceremony will begin at 9 p.m. Thursday in the women's parlor of the church, at Quadra and Pandora, and present and past members are invited.

One last note — and that's an appropriate phrase in light of this Town Talk item.

A group of Victorians was on a bus in Washington state when Mount St. Helens popped her cork.

A couple of ladies on the bus developed hysterics and things looked a bit dicey.

Up stepped Irene Moore, a member of the City of Gardens chapter of the Sweet Adelines, and with the bus driver's mike in hand, launched into a few songs to calm everybody down.

Hours later — with Irene still leading the sing-song, the bus reached its destination and a slightly hoarse Sweet Adeline surrendered the mike.

Fast relief pushed on tax load

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Interim relief should be given small business owners hit by an unfair B.C. Hydro surcharge, Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said Thursday.

The minister offered to help the Capital Region District persuade Hydro to figure out a way to help the businessmen while the inequities are being removed from the Urban Transit Authority Act.

The minister said it could take some time to amend the act because the house is facing a heavy load of legislation.

In the meantime, he said, CRD chairman James Campbell should help small commercial ventures being overtaxed under the billing system.

"If B.C. Hydro is not cooperating, I'll help him (Campbell) get through," Vander Zalm said.

Campbell told the Times earlier this week Hydro refused to co-operate when asked to alter the billing structure, which charges a flat $90 rate to all commercial accounts, regardless of size. The money goes to offset transit deficits.

The CRD transit department and Vander Zalm's office started receiving protest letters and calls from angry regional district residents after the Hydro surcharge went into effect April 1.

One motel onwer with 13 meters said he received 13 bills this week and will end up paying $1,170 this year unless the system is corrected.

The residential surcharge is $12 a year for each account.

Vander Zalm said he has been aware of the problem for some time and has been comtemplating various changes to the act.

"The legislation is complete, all I need to to is bring it before the house," he said.

However, the minister added that there are about 30 bills to be presented and he is 25th in line.

Vander Zalm said the CRD is "passing the buck" by referring angry calls to his office.

The regional district picked the Hydro surcharge as a method of collecting tax to offset its 25 per cent share of the transit deficit, he pointed out.

Municipal affairs offered two other options: a property tax or a gasoline surcharge.

The Greater Vancouver Regional District split the transit levy between the gasoline and Hydro surcharge and is not having as many problems as the CRD, Vander Zalm said.

The legislation amendment will change the tax from a flat rate surcharge to a tax relating to the size of the customer's bill.

Red Lion sold to chain

The Red Lion Inn has been purchased by Westwater Hotels Inc., a Vancouver-based chain.

The company took possession of the 80-room hotel this week but plans no changes in management.

Westwater will begin a $500,000 renovation program this fall involving the coffee shop, pub, meeting hall and rooms, company vice-president Bashir El-Khalafowi said.

The construction would take place at the end of the peak summer tourist season.

Westwater is a B.C. company but its main holdings at the moment are in the United States. It owns seven hotels in Washington and Oregon.

President of the company is Dan Fritz, a Vancouver developer.

The Red Lion had been owned by Park Pacific Ltd. of Victoria.

Couvelier kills pact on Tillicum

Saanich council voted 5-4 Thursday to reject a proposal by Ald. Bob Wright of Victoria that would have resulted in an out-of-court settlement of the Tillicum shopping centre battle.

Mayor Mel Couvelier, who cast the deciding vote, said efforts to find a solution satisfying all parties have failed.

He recommended council instead follow the advice of municipal solicitor Chris Nation.

Nation's proposal was called "despicable" by Ald. John Mika.

In a three-page report Nation recommended Cal Investments Ltd. explain its $30-million development to Capital Region District directors during a public meeting June 16 or 17.

Any decision made at the meeting would be non-binding on Saanich and the developers, Nation said.

If the regional district still opposes the shopping centre expansion after it has heard all the information, the issue will go to B.C. Supreme Court June 23 for a full trial.

Saanich held the special meeting to discuss an offer made by Wright on Wednesday during a regional board meeting.

Wright proposed the city of Victoria and Saanich both submit all development proposals with regional significance to the CRD for approval.

The regional district's decision would be binding on both municipalities.

The offer hinged on Saanich reinstating a restrictive covenant limiting the Tillicum centre to 295,000 square feet. Cal Investments would then apply to the CRD to have the covenant removed.

Damages arising from the reinstatement of the covenant would be paid by the CRD, under the agreement.

Ald. Howard Sturrock made a motion to accept the offer and have lawyers for Saanich, the developer and the CRD meet in an effort to solve any legal complications.

And council was urged to accept it by CRD chairman James Campbell and Ald. Bill McElroy of Victoria.

Campbell promised Saanich a fair deal if it accepted the compromise.

"I don't want to make trouble for anybody," said Campbell.

The chairman said Saanich's decision to remove the covenant last month was viewed as an attack on the regional plan and an act of bad faith.

"I think I felt more like a bumpkin than I've ever felt in my life," he said.

Nation told aldermen the offer is unacceptable because Saanich has officially removed the covenant and agreed to accept large sums of money from the developers Cal Investments.

"Any move to reinstate the restrictive covenant is laced with legal difficulty and would provoke a lawsuit between Saanich and Cal," Nation said.

"There would be horrendous legal complications the could begin to rank on a par with the present action," he said.

Nation also said he has grave doubts about the legality of an agreement between Saanich and Victoria to refer development proposals to the CRD for approval.

Regional planning should be carried out in the official regional plan, not by agreements betweeen member municipalities and the CRD, Nation said.

Cal Investments spokesman Ronald Gillanders said the municipality and the CRD would face million dollar damage suits if they attempted to reinstate the covenant.

"We feel our case is strong and we're not prepared to waive any rights," Gillanders said. "We're prepared to fight it through the courts to the end."

FIRST FLIGHT may be the last one for a while for a 20-year-old Deep Cove man following theft of a plane from Victoria Airport early Thursday morning. Plane, above, owned by Flight Victoria Services Centre was found in open field near Cowichan Bay. About $30,000 damage was done in rough landing. Suspect was nabbed a few hours after the incident and was to appear in provincial court today charged with theft of an aircraft and 12 counts of mischief relating to damage done to other planes at the airport. Police said the suspect told them he had never flown before, and had acted on impulse.

Games berths on line for Elk Lake canoeists

Elk Lake is where the action will be on Sunday for paddlers of Vancouver Island, Powell River and Ocean Falls.

They will be here to race off in various events. The outcome of the races will decide who gets a spot on the area's 12-paddler team in this year's B.C. Summer Games, to be held in Kelowna August 14 to 17.

The local paddlers have won all the past gold medals in the past two summer games and will be trying for another sweep this year.

The women's open will be raced at noon, followed by the juniors' event at 1 p.m.

The mixed opens start at 2 p.m., the last race of the day being the men's open at 3 p.m.

Sunday marks the last day of Canoe Safety Week and members of the Victoria Canoe and Kayak Club will give canoeing and safety demonstrations while the races are being held.

There will be a display of canoes, kayaks, ocean kayaks and equipment from noon to 1 p.m.. From 1 to 2 p.m. visitors will be shown how to portage, launch and load a canoe.

Using both canoes and kayaks, members will demonstrate basic paddling strokes from 2 to 3 p.m. Rescue methods will be shown in canoes and kayaks from 3 to 4 p.m., during which time there will also be a precision paddling demonstration.

If you would like to get a taste of what it is like to sail from northern Scotland to Norway in an open dinghy a good place to be this evening is the University of Victoria's McKinnon Building.

David Massy, who owns a Wayfarer called Komokwa, will show the 40-minute film Summer Cruise, which tells the story of Frank Dye and the way he decided to spend a two weeks' summer holiday in his Wayfarer.

He picked Royal Air Force corporal Russell Brockbank for his crew and spent two weeks sailing to Norway.

It was a hair-raising trip, complete with three capsizes and a broken mast that had to be replaced with a jury rig.

Wayfarer enthusiast Henry Niezen, who is vice-commodore of the Cadboro Bay Sailing Association, will have his Wayfarer rigged tonight for people who would like to see one for the first time.

David says Bill Rogers of Oakville, Ont., president of the Canadian Wayfarers Association, is hoping to be here for this evening's get-together.

Wayfarers are expected to gain in popularity in this area now that Chris Blencoee of Wayland Marine in Vancouver is manufacturing them. David says they're raced with a crew of either two or three and are so forgiving that they are used in England to train the blind.

An event that will also be starring small boats this weekend is the fifth annual Cal 20 national championships, to be held out of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club.

A fleet of between 25 and 30 is expected to take part. There will be five races with one throw-out. Racing will get under way at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday. There will be a steak barbecue at the club following the completion of Saturday's racing.

Like the Wayfarer, the Cal 20 has built up a reputation. Bill Lapworth designed her for windy San Francisco bay and, in my estimation, she is the best seaworthy boat in her length.

When my husband and I had our old Cal 20, Galenaia, we sailed her in five consecutive Juan de Fucas. She was the smallest boat in the race but lived up to her "mini-ocean racer" tab, even in the foulest weather.

At the special luncheon held to mark the 50th anniversary of Swiftsure last Friday I was reminded of what a trooper she was when I chatted with Henry Kotkins, skipper of Diamond Head.

He still remembers the time we were racing from Race Rocks to the finish line, both boats under spinnaker in a stiff wind. It took Diamond Head quite a while to get ahead of us as Galenaia surfed down the big waves, adding knots to our speed.

The Canoe Bay Sailing Club will have its annual International Boundary Race on Saturday. The 30-miler will begin at 9 a.m. in the vicinity of the government wharf at Sidney.

The CBSA will have series racing at Gyro Park on Tuesday with the first race starting at 6:30 p.m.

The RVYC will have series racing on Wednesday evening, beginning at the same time. The top Laser sailors this week were Rupert Holmes-Smith, Mike Turner and Dave Hingley. The first three Cal 20s to go over the finish line were Ken Wilson's Manitou, George Lewis' Tansy II and Ed Life's Semiramis.

Doug Taylor-Lee's Helios led the Thunderbird fleet, runners-up being Bob Grundison's Owl and Dennis Robinson's Coco.

In Catalina 27 competition it was Gary Jacobi's Salty Dream, Geoff Buck's Buck Shot and Gerry Porter's Lickety Split.

Ron Saunders' Irrawaddy won the race for the smaller Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet boats, edging out Bruce Klaver's Wings and Vidas Stukas' Jan. Leaders in the race for the larger PHRF boats were Fleetwood, owned by Doug Hemphill and Dave Richardson; Soren Isbrand's Danish Pastry and Bruce Kenning's Arkle.

Blues sign player-coach

By ERNIE FEDORUK

Victoria Blues, less than three weeks away from their opening game in the Northwest Baseball League, continue to stock their roster.

A pair of returnees and a coach are the latest to agree to terms with the class A professional team that operated as the Mussels the past two years.

Pitcher Ed Koziol, who led the league in games won (9), started (16), innings pitched (125) and strikeouts (104), and outfielder Nick Belmonte, who hit .260, are both returning.

Manager Lorne Barnswell also announced that Barry Moss will join Blues as a player-coach and that Victoria-reared Mike Finlayson, who reached triple A ranks as a Montreal Expo farmhand before a shoulder injury cut short his pro career last year, will serve as a pitching coach.

Finlayson has been playing first base with Farmer Construction of the Senior Amateur League.

Moss and Finlayson will assist playing-manager Jim Gaddis, the 1978 all-star third baseman with Grays Harbor Loggers. Gaddis, knuckleball pitcher Dave Weis (0-3) and shortstop Rod Murphy (.246) were the first to sign with the re-named Victoria team.

Barnswell also confirmed that Blues "are very interested" in Grant Fuhr, the Victoria Cougar goaltender who enjoyed a sensational rookie year in the Western Hockey League. Fuhr, who had been offered a tryout with Toronto Blue Jays of the American Baseball League but was unable to take advantage of the offer because of his hockey, has agreed to try out with the Blues.

GRANT FUHR
. . . baseball prospect

In addition to Fuhr, Gaddis hopes to look at several other district prospects. One is pitcher Mike Bull, currently playing for Merchants in the Pacific Coast Junior League. At least four other members of the junior squad also are expected to try out for the pro team.

Victoria again will operate in the Northern Division along with Walla Walla, Bellingham and Grays Harbor. Central Oregon (Bend), Medford, Salem and Eugene will make up the Southern Division.

Because of the ash fall from Mount St. Helen's recent eruptions, Barnswell said the possibility of Walla Walla playing a full schedule "does not look rosy." Walla Walla's situation and travel through Washington and Oregon will be discussed.

Blues will play at least two exhibitions before opening the season June 17 at Royal Athletic Park against Walla Walla. Victoria will face Nanaimo senior all-stars in the Hub City June 11 and will play the Junior Merchants in a "Mayor's Trophy" confrontation at Royal Athletic Park on June 13.

DOING HANDSTAND is Minnesota Twins' second baseman Rob Wilfong after collision with Chicago White Sox runner Jim Morrison broke up double play attempt during seventh inning of American League baseball game Thursday at Bloomington, Minn. Relay throw was too late to get Wayne Nordhagen at first. Wilfong suffered minor injuries in collision but finished game which Twins won, 5-2. Linescores on page 26. (AP Wirephoto).

Timbermen give new coach a win

NEW WESTMINSTER — Nanaimo Timbermen shocked New Westminster Salmonbellies 16-10 in a Western Lacrosse Association game Thursday to give their new coach his first victory.

It was the first game behind the bench for former goalkeeper Earl Nicholson since taking over from Larry McNabb who resigned last week.

The defeat was costly to the Salmonbellies as it virtually knocked them out of contention for a berth in the Nations '80 tournament.

It was their fifth loss amd they now trail league-leading Coquitlam Adanacs by four points with Coquitlam having two games in hand.

For the Timbermen, it was their third win.

Charn Dhillon, Doug Angrove, Ted Grieves, Ron MacNeil and Brian Evans each scored two goals for Nanaimo which trailed 4-3 after the first and then took command 9-4 in the second period. Pete Rushton, Ron Sage, Ron Brown, Wayne Reeve, Mike Walsh and Ian Kennedy added singles.

Len Ciminelli scored three goals to lead New Westminster while Wayne Goss scored twice. Bob Tasker, Gilles Bezeau, Greg Jensen, Mark Tuura and Cory Carlyle scored the other Salmonbellies' goals.

When four not enough

Maybe they were jolted a little too much by those California earthquakes.

Because four weren't really enough Thursday night at Central Park.

Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League "Selects" mauled the touring Four's Enough squad from Long Beach 13-3 in an exhibition game before about 500 fans.

Ron Fedosenko, Mel Nelson and Lemn Carolan held the tourists, who might now be thinking about a change in occupation, to seven hits — including three each by pitcher Ron Rupp and batterymate Kevin Kelly.

Rupp smashed a two-run home run in the second inning.

Avie Stubbington, who had two solo homers; Barry McLachlan and Dale Marshall, each with one homer; and Bob Butterworth and Nelson all drove in two runs each for Selects.

Six Selects crossed the plate in the sixth inning.

At Hyacinth Park, Marilyn Bolton came up with her second no-hitter of the season to lead Bemister's Welding to a 7-0 shutout over Butler Bros. while New York-New York and Island Dryco Breakers battled to a 2-2 deadlock in Victoria-Saanich Senior Women's League games.

Bolton allowed just five baserunners, struck out one and walked two while fashioning her sixth win of the season.

In Heywood Men's League play at Heywood Avenue Park, Rick Miller and Ken Greenhalgh combined pitching talents for a four-hitter while guiding Strathcona Hotel to a 4-1 decision over Mears Realty.

Jack Harper and Ash Douglass hit homers for Strathcona while Dave Green homered for the lone Mears run.

At Macdonald Park, Everett Hudlin hurled a two-hitter to lead Mayfair Insurance to a 7-2 win over James Bay Inn and Saints came up with a five-run sixth inning en route to a 5-4 decision over Rebels in Macdonald Men's League play.

Could loggers look after fish, wildlife?

by stewart lang

"I don't think there's much in the way of political leadership involved in the environment. Most of our politicians are traditionally business-oriented people who see the environment as something to exploit.

"They don't understand the significance of evolution, they don't understand the significance of functioning ecosystems — to them its all an abstract and they don't know what to do with it.

"Not that they're wilful - they just don't comprehend it."

Biologist-artist Glen Smith summed up quite neatly what is probably the foremost problem facing the environment in British Columbia today.

And, as we said while introducing him here Wednesday, he has a radical but logical solution.

Smith maintains that government agencies aren't suited to looking after the environment because of logistics as well as the political process.

"Governments just don't make good entrepreneurs.

"They're having to deal with urgent things like jobs and the economy . . . and the environment doesn't seem to have a place there.

"The environmentalists aren't much help either.

"They're so damned divided in their opinions about things. It's almost becoming a religious cult to them."

All of this doesn't help the professional fisheries or wildlife manager do a better job.

There are a few other factors in the equation, too.

"You've got conflicting legislation, you've got conflicting philosophies, you've got a highly divided public sector and you're constantly faced with inadequacies in terms of funding," explained Smith.

"For instance, a lot of the problems involved with the environment are very sophisticated technical problems like pollution - and there's never any money for research. You're always working with just the bare minimum of facts.

"Generally what you have to do is rely on your judgement and, of course, being a judgement, it's always challengable."

He added:

"If you're working in the environment it doesn't matter what you do — you're not going to do the right thing."

It's a case of "damned if you do and damned if you don't."

According to Smith, one way out of the dilemma, is to put everything under one roof and farm the actual labor out to the private sector.

"As far as recreation resources and stuff are concerned, particularly wildlife which is so intimately related to forestry, I would like to see a lot of it integrated right into the over-all forestry program.

"Make the forest service responsible for managing the public domain.

"If you're going to pursue a philosophy of integrated use you're better off to put all of your decision-making processes in one institution rather than trying to divide it up between several," he added.

He feels by doing this a lot more sophisticated system would emerge.

Fears that foresters can't be trusted don't hold water.

"That's junk," Smith exclaimed. "Look at Europe where they integrate forestry and wildlife and get levels of wildlife production that we don't even dream about. Most of the European foresters are very sophisticated land managers . . . much more sophisticated than our foresters — who tend to be woodpeckers."

Intensive management under a blending of forest service, biological and private sector skills would fill another need.

"You need a labor force if you want to get into this kind of management problem. If we want to produce more deer, which technically we're quite able to do, you need that labor force."

"I think in this province particularly, where forestry and forest land dominate the scene, would be to intigrate a lot of the recreational and resource management into the forest service and then pay the forest industry to do the actual work."

Smith points out the forest companies have control of access, lots of equipment and unlimited manpower compared to the fish and wildlife branch.

There would be a period of adjustment.

"Given the opportunity, I'm sure it wouldn't take industry too long to develop the expertise."

There would be a few intangible benefits to having a logger looking after fish, deer or a recreational facility.

"He would develop some pride in what he was doing. That kind of guy, who is there every day on the job travelling the roads, would become one hell of a sophisticated farmer. It would be one of the best methods you could dream of for enforcing regulations."

The government would be involved in allocating the resources, determining over-all policies and directing where public revenue is to be spent.

"The opportunities are all there if you can develop the social and economic reasons for doing it," he added. The process would be accelerated, Smith felt, "if you could get the damn prima donnas out of the institutions and get them to work together . . .

"You couldn't do the whole thing at once. I'm not suggesting that. I'm saying what we should be doing is working on the philosophy of the thing and then taking it step step by step and let it evolve."

Nealies Fort, Hudon set up rich exactor

Two "overlays" connected in one-two fashion Thursday night at Sandown Raceway and the result lit up the board.

In the eighth race, with defending driving champion Joe Hudon at the reins, the four-year old bay gelding Nealies Fort ($24.10) came from far back to claim the victory. Nealies Fort, winner of his last here and four on the year, surprisingly got away at 11-1 odds while Governor's Star Boy, who was also lightly regarded, finished second to set up a $287.90 exactor payoff — the biggest of the night.

Three other exactors also paid off in triple figures in the first, second and fifth races.

The tenth race triactor, normally the largest payout in a card, yielded $136.80 to the lucky ticket holders.

Woody's Kat in the 10th, Shirley Mohawk in the ninth and Deck Hand in the seventh each chalked up their third win of the meet.

Mike Stymest drove two winners, Saska Wind in the fifth and Deck Hand in the seventh.

Thursday's results and Saturday's entries are on page 28.

Injury time win for Bays

Murray Allen kicked a penalty goal in injury time Thursday night to give James Bay Athletic Association a 14-13 win over touring Scottish side Stewarts-Melville in an exhibition rugby game at Royal Athletic Park.

The Bays chalked up an 11-0 lead in the first half on two tries by Drew Dennison and an earlier penalty by Allen but the Scottish team, which had won three and tied one in four matches on the Lower Mainland, came back strongly in the second half.

Team captain Doug Morgan, a former Scottish international, booted three long penalty goals and forward Andy Blackwood charged over for a try as the Scots went ahead 13-11.

With only a few seconds left, Allen missed a penalty shot but he made up for this miss by kicking the winning three points in injury time.

Stewarts-Melville beat Surrey, Richmond and Vancouver Trojans and tied with University of British Columbia Old Boys before coming over for their only game on the Island and the last match of their tour.

Tackle off to Yuma

Defensive tackle Tim Anderson of Victoria has won a football scholarship to Western Arizona State University at Yuma.

The 19-year-old Anderson, who attended Simon Fraser University last year, was the outstanding lineman at the B.C. Lions development camp this spring.

A former rugby player with Oak Bay High School and then James Bay Athletic Association, the six foot-three, 260-pound tackle played minor football in the Oak Bay Invader League.

He leaves for Yuma in August.

Field hockey trials

Field hockey players hoping to make the Island team to compete in the B.C. Summer Games in Kelowna in August will take part in trials over the next three Sundays at Oak Bay High School fields.

Trials for women aged between 13 and 21 start at 10 a.m. each day while the men's team trials, for those 13 and over, are at noon.

For more details, phone Ken Eng at 388-5917.

Six Islanders in contention for B.C. team

Despite the fact the Lower Island Selects have been knocked out of the Whitecaps Invitational Tournament, there are still six boys from the squad in contention for the B.C. under 16 soccer team.

Those remaining are Brian Moseley, Scott Longpre, David Houston, Jeff Mallett, Adam Keith and Chris Smith.

The Lower Island Selects played to a 3-3 tie with Delta Selects in regulation time of their quarter-final match last Saturday. But Delta won 6-4 on corner kicks and advanced to the semi-finals.

Paisley best pilot

LONDON (Reuter) — Bob Paisley of Liverpool has been named England's soccer manager-of-the-year in a poll of 25 leading soccer writers and commentators.

It is the fourth time in the last five years that Paisley has won the award. This season he steered Liverpool to its 12th league championship and into the semi-finals of the English Football Association Cup.

In the six years since Paisley took over, Liverpool has won four league titles, the European Cup twice and the UEFA Cup once.

Federal clout vs. Big Brother

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau reiterated Thursday any new constitution will have to include "very, very substantial powers" for the federal government.

He told a news conference he is willing, for example, to give the provinces a strong voice in a revamped Senate as many federal and provincial politicians have suggested.

But Ottawa could not accept such a proposal if it meant the federal government — through the House of Commons — would be deprived of important powers and that it could exercise what rights it did retain only "under the watchful eye of Big Brother, the provinces."

The prime minister said he wants "visible progress" on a new constitution within one year and agreed to meet next week with leaders of the two federal opposition parties to discuss their positions on the issue.

But he rejected requests to allow representatives of native groups and the two northern territorial governments to participate in the talks on an equal footing with the provinces.

Trudeau told a news conference that if change isn't evident in "months rather than years," the Parti Quebecois will try to seek a new mandate by saying federalism "is not renewable" and the other nine provinces' current interest in the issue may wane.

He said he does not have any particular strategy in mind to break the impasse that has prevented reform of the 113-year-old British North America Act for more than 50 years.

However, he suggested there must be a return to federal powers as they were "before the period of decentralization which has been lasting some 20 years in Canada."

The prime minister reiterated he is willing to transfer some federal powers relating to spending as well as the right of the federal government to take over provincial projects in the national interest — the so-called declaratory power.

But he will not "totally abdicate our responsibilities in certain areas relating to the economy."

Trudeau also told his news conference he hopes to get agreement with the provinces at a meeting June 9 on how urgently reform should be pursued, the principles that should underly a new constitution and how the goal can be reached.

But he said he clearly believes the deadline must be "months rather than years or decades" to avoid giving the Parti Quebecois a platform for re-election.

In the House, Opposition Leader Joe Clark asked Trudeau to include natives and elected officials of the two northern territories as participants at future constitutional talks.

Trudeau refused, saying both natives and territorial representatives have attended past constitutional conferences as observers or members of the federal delegation but could not be placed on an equal status with the provincial leaders.

One Yukon government official called the rejection "a shame," while Doug Graham, chairman of the Yukon legislative assembly's consitutional development committee, said it is ridiculous.

"It's difficult to believe that Ottawa can just ignore anyone above the 60th parallel," he said. "It's as though we didn't exist."

Super efficient U.K. family car

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — British Leyland, the state-run auto manufacturer, said it has produced a prototype family car that can go 97 to 113 kilometres on 4.5 litres of gasoline (about 60 miles to the gallon).

The company said it can mass-produce the car by 1987 if it gets government funds. Without help, it could be 10 years away.

Manitoba hospital strike expands

WINNIPEG (CP) — A strike by support staff spread to more southern Manitoba health institutions today, following a breakdown in talks aimed at resolving the contract deadlock.

Picket lines went up after midnight Thursday night at 132-bed Concordia Hospital in Winnipeg, which prepared for the strike by sending patients home.

The Concordia employees were joined by 75 workers at a personal care home next to the hospital, bringing the total number of strikers across Manitoba to more than 3,000.

Rabbi Carmi with copy of 'racy' novel

Rabbi's firing not kosher?

OTTAWA (CP) — An Ottawa rabbi, who says he was fired for writing a racy novel and complaining about his working hours, said Thursday he will continue a hunger strike he began Sunday until he is paid $8,500 the congregation owes him.

Rabbi Joseph Carmi, who collapsed at a social function at a synagogue Wednesday, is demanding the money as compensation for working seven days a week for three years.

"It's less than human," he said in an interview.

"They (the congregation's executive board) made me work day after day without ever giving me a day off. Even the caretakers get one day off a week."

Rabbi Carmi says his firing was brought about by the publication last year of his novel, Who Is After The Rabbi?, which centres on an immigrant rabbi jailed after being wrongfully accused of molesting a young woman.

Two weeks after it was published, the board of his 850-member congregation said his contract as assistant clergyman would not be renewed. However, notice of termination was late and his contract was renewed for another year.

He was fired last week after a prayer reading, during which he commented on his relationship with the executive. He had five weeks left on his contract.

The 48-year-old rabbi, his wife and eight-month-old daughter must also vacate their apartment, paid for by the congregation, by the end of June. He said he has not been able to find another job.

He has appealed to the Ontario ministry of labor and said he is prepared to fight the case in court.

Board president Sidney Margles, who denied that the book had any bearing on the rabbi's dismissal, would not give reasons for the firing.

Wednesday, the board paid Rabbi Carmi for 21 statutory holidays he worked over three years. But so far it has refused to pay for the seventh day of work each week.

"It seems they are quite stubborn," the rabbi said.

Tories bury the hatchet on eve of showdown

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

OTTAWA —The federal Tories have privately hissed and then made up on the brink of a widely-touted weekend showdown that could have torn the squabbling party apart.

A last-minute dramatic reconciliation between party president Bob Coates and Opposition Leader Joe Clark means that the Saturday summit of the 28-member Conservative executive council will now bring only public tidings of peace, thin smiles and a unanimous vote of confidence in Clark's leadership.

Both sides were under heavy pressure to relent, both sides compromised and both sides toddled off the field with hefty consolation prizes. Clark has agreed to change his call for a fall party general meeting to a February, 1981 assembly in Ottawa.

The general meeting will ask about 2,000 delegates if they want a leadership review — another contest for Clark's job. Coates has yielded to Clark's request for a series of regional preparatory meetings in the autumn.

For Clark, the regional meetings are both an excellent face-saving formula and a superb ploy. He can argue that these gatherings will provide necessary policy and strategy input for the first general party meeting since the fall of 1977. He can also use them to distract party faithful from the leadership issue by putting delegates to work on the party's image problems among Quebec and urban ethnic voters.

Moreover, Clark was apparently advised that he might not defeat the leadership review question by a comfortable margin in the fall. Many executive members feel that his election policies will be vindicated over the winter because the Liberals will adopt them. These members argued that they might not be able to control disaffected delegates in the fall but that the membership would be mollified when Clark is proven right in mid-winter. So it was in Clark's own interest to reverse his position.

Meanwhile, the February assembly was also a major coup for Coates. Although he has been party president since late 1977, the 23-year veteran MP has been largely ignored when Clark went looking for advice or cabinet help. He finally won Clark's ear at the hour-long private meeting on Tuesday. In future, the party president will likely be consulted more often and he may even be asked to brief caucus on a weekly basis about the state of the party's health.

Moreover, Coates was apparently under heavy caucus pressure to diffuse the issue before it erupted into a major public embarrassment at the weekend session. While many executive members do not want to shower Clark with bouquets, they also wanted to avoid the spectacle of a top-level brawl. So it was in Coates' interest also to sidestep the feud and he will move the confidence motion Saturday.

"It's a compromise that will work," concedes national party director Paul Curley. "Mr. Clark was advised that it would be better to put the meeting off a bit because by then the present government will have introduced a budget and a major part of its legislative program and the support for the leader will be much greater since the position that his government took will be seen to have been right."

"The leader and I had very amicable discussions and came up with a formula," says Coates. "I'm certainly happy that this is over with."

The party's problems erupted in the wake of the Feb. 18 general election when the Conservative government toppled and the old guard vented its pent-up frustration. The Tory constitution demands that a general meeting must be held every two years — with the exception of election years. The rules also stipulate that the delegates must always be polled on whether or not they want a leadership review.

Clark originally argued that a fall meeting would clear the air, confirm his leadership in the public eye and revitalize party policy. He also obviously figured that the battle-worn Tories would want to avoid an immediate post-election bloodbath.

Coates privately — and then not-so-privately — countered that the party needed time to lick its wounds and to assess the performances of Clark and the rival Liberals.

There is one more factor to consider:

By early 1983, as the Liberals lurch into their third year in office, the Tories will once more be having a general meeting and once more voting on leadership review. This is when the real challenge will occur — on the brink of an election. Clark has not won. He has only bought time.

Weather gives break in fires

DRYDEN, Ont. (CP) — Firefighters in northwestern Ontario got what they hoped for Thursday in their battle against the province's worst forest fires in 40 years — rain, cooler temperatures, higher humidity and prevailing west winds.

Although officials warned the situation was by no means under control, weather conditions gave crews enough of a break to establish lines around most of Ontario's 60 fires, including the 275,000-acre (110,000-hectare) giant burning about 20 kilometres east of Kenora.

In British Columbia, 175 fires were burning, 112 in the Prince George Forest area, but none were out of control. The fire hazard was low to moderate.

Only 20 fires were burning in Alberta — five out of control — in the Athabasca Lake, Lac la Biche and Peace River areas. More than 1.3 million acres have been blackened this year in Alberta.

The province has more than 1,000 firefighters combatting 81 fires, 13 of which were out of control.

In Saskatchewan, 53 fires were burning Thursday and the largest, at Primrose Lake near the Alberta-Saskatchewan border, has already swept 350,000 acres.

Quebec reported 25 fires, all under control, the largest burning in an uninhabited area 500 kilometres northwest of Montreal.

No fires were burning in Newfoundland. In New Brunswick, which has had 179 fires this year, the provincial government is starting an alert program to warn people of fire hazard.

The worst fire in Canadian history occurred in 1825 in the provinc of New Brunswick.

He chose a lifetime of deadlines

Colonist managing editor Fred Barnes recalls the highlights

Fred Barnes, retiring this week after 29 years as managing editor of The Daily Colonist, is one of an exclusive breed of newspapermen who spend an entire working life in the business — no stints as factory hand, bushwhacker or real estate salesman.

He became a Toronto Telegram correspondent before leaving high school in depression-hit Owen Sound, and on graduating was lucky to get a job as full-time correspondent for the paper in Meaford.

Youngsters starting work today at $5 an hour and better may find it hard to believe that Barnes could earn $12 a week, pay board and room and have $4 left to spend as he pleased.

In the late '30s Barnes went back to work in Owen Sound, then, still with the Telegram, to Oshawa for six months, arriving in the aftermath of the great General Motors strike for which the army was called out.

For the next six years including most of the Second World War he was on staff in Toronto, first as reporter, then deskman and makeup editor.

Among the great stories of the period were the relentless Nazi domination of Europe, Dunkirk, the Battle of Britain, the bombing of Pearl Harbor, the invasion of North Africa, the Battle of El Alamein, the landings in Italy, the siege of Leningrad, and the Allied invasion of Normandy.

He recalls being summoned at 5 a.m. when the Japanese attacked the U.S. fleet at Pearl Harbor, and spending a frantic day poring over the copy streaming into the newsroom.

But one of the more memorable events had nothing to do with the war. Barnes recalls in 1945 one of the biggest snowstorms ever to hit Ontario, strangling Toronto.

He started for the Telegram's downtown office on streetcars, two of which became snowbound after moving only a few blocks. He trudged the rest of the eight miles on foot, and was one of the first to arrive at work.

Barnes and his colleagues were stuck in the building for four days and put out a paper each day, maintaining the century-old tradition of never missing an edition. But press runs were cut to as little as 5,000 copies because there was no way to deliver them.

In February, 1945, Barnes came to the Colonist as general reporter, finding a very different kind of operation, a paper running second in circulation to the Times and beset with problems.

The old downtown newsroom was only about 40 by 30 feet, one-fifth the size today, and had a news desk and six desks for reporters. Everyone shared five old-fashioned phones and pounded out their copy on ancient, upright Underwoods.

National and foreign news came slowly over three teletype machines, including two of the original Creed line-printers.

Recent improvements in newsroom technology make a vivid contrast with those conditions and have made newsrooms more dominant than ever in history, Barnes believes.

"I'm extremely grateful to have had a chance to work with computer terminals and high-speed machines.

"They are the only major change in the newspaper business in the 43 years I've been in it."

He recalled in 1946 Tim Matson was appointed to take charge of the paper. "He had some excellent new ideas and was more than willing to put money back into the paper," Barnes said.

Matson, back from the war, stirred the community with some of his innovations, including improved wire and photo services. One new link was International News Service, "the best secondary wire service in existence, with some of the best writers, like Bob Considine.

"They didn't try to cover every little news story, but they did a fantastic job on things like the World Series," Barnes said.

The first major event after Barnes' arrival was VE Day, when he recalls Victoria had a narrow escape from the kind of rioting that took place in Halifax.

Crowds filled downtown streets to celebrate the end of hostilities in Europe, and most were good natured, Barnes said. But as the night wore on and "the good natured people went home, the others gathered around the Johnson Street liquor store and seemed intent on getting in.

"They sent a bunch of airforce service police with axe handles, and I guess they cracked the odd head and managed to turn people away.

"If they'd got into that liquor store it would have been a rare old time for Victoria," Barnes said.

Shortly after the war one of the new hands hired by the Conservative-supporting Colonist was a young man named John Hart who got his first byline on a light-hearted story that began, "I'll take vanilla."

Next day Barnes, then city editor, got a call from the Liberal premier of B.C.'s coalition government, John Hart. "I hope that guy has some other initials," the premier told him. "Can't you manage some other byline?"

Barnes, always obliging, obliged.

In retirement, Fred plans to spend more time with his wife, Eva, who has displayed, says Colonist publisher R.J. Bower, a remarkable tolerance over the years despite the weird, night hours of work.

And as part and parcel of retirement, there'll be some fishing, golf, theatre and movies.

In 1946, he was dubbed 'The Basher' because of his vigor in finishing off fish

Hospital wings cleared

MONTREAL (CP) — Firemen evacuated more than 200 patients from two wings of east-end Notre Dame hospital today after a fire which broke out in a ground-floor storage area sent smoke belching through the institution.

Authorities said they had no reports of injuries to any patients.

Reg Campeau, assistant fire director for the City of Montreal, said firemen managed to bring the flames under control within two hours of the outbreak at about 6 a.m. Montreal time.

The fire broke out in or near a storage room containing bedding, sheets and other supplies, said Campeau. A hospital official said he thought the flames may have started in a garbage chute before spreading to the storage area and to the sterilization centre where supplies are sterilized for use in operating rooms and elsewhere.

Flames were confined to the back of the building, but smoke spread through most of the structure. At the height of the blaze, dense smoke could be seen belching out the rear windows on several floors.

Campeau estimated that between 200 and 300 patients were evacuated. One wing of the hospital was cleared completely and a second wing was partially evacuated.

Patients were sent to various other hospitals in the area.

It was not known exactly how many patients were in Notre Dame when the fire broke out, but estimates ranged up to 900.

Officials and patients said the evacuation was orderly and there was no panic.

After the flames were put out, hundreds of patients, medical staff and anxious relatives milled about the lobbies. Orderlies, doctors and nurses carried some infirm patients in their arms towards ambulances waiting to transfer them to other institutions, while other people were whisked to the ambulances on stretchers.

Still other patients waited for a chance to return to their rooms in wings not affected by fire or smoke damage.

Several patients interviewed by reporters said they had been recuperating from operations performed as recently as Thursday.

Huddled in nightgowns and hospital sleeping garb, many spoke in monosyllables and fragments, saying they had been frightened by the dense smoke. But they praised hospital staff, police and firemen for their work in the orderly evacuation.

Camera to hunt for miners

VAL D'OR, Que. (CP) — Rescue workers, fighting against time to free eight miners trapped in the Belmoral gold mine for 10 days, plan to use a midget television camera today to try to locate two of the men.

The plan comes after a microphone, lowered Thursday down two holes drilled into an excavation area of the mine where the men are believed to be, failed to detect any signs of life.

Quebec provincial police spokesman Claude Gagnon said the nine-centimetre-wide Spectronic camera, operated by an underwater contractor based in Washington, D.C., would be lowered down a third hole to be drilled to the area later today.

"Any positive results would boost morale," Gagnon said. "Not that morale is low, but motivation has been down lately."

The camera and its operator arrived here early today aboard a Quebec government aircraft. Gagnon said the new hole would not be drilled until the cameraman could give workers "some specifications."

Hopes for the survival of the two miners, raised earlier this week by reports that tapping noises had been heard from the excavation area, were dimmed somewhat by results of rescue operations Thursday.

Gagnon said the first time the microphone was lowered to the 60-metre-deep excavation area, it picked up sounds of dripping water; the second time, it was pulled out coated wth mud.

"We got the impression that the two guys could not be alive, but there's always that small possibility," the policeman said.

Rescue workers, who have been toiling around the clock since the cave-in trapped the eight miners May 20, continued to be hampered by thick slime and water that has filled much of the mine.

Plans to bore a first hole to the excavation area were delayed by 12 hours because slime had to be cleaned out of the area where the drill was to be positioned.

Asbestos story muzzle denied

MONTREAL (CP) — The vice-president of the Quebec Asbestos Mines Association confirmed today that the association has failed to get an injunction blocking a CBC news report on the use of asbestos in rail ballast by Canadian Pacific Railway.

Paul Filteau said in a telephone interview that Quebec Superior Court Justice Yves Forest turned down the request Wednesday night.

The fact that the association had applied for the injunction became public Thursday, but it could not be confirmed until today that the request had been rejected.

Filteau said the mines association now will try to meet with CBC officials to express "our point of view" on what he said were biased and exaggerated reports.

The reports, broadcast on CBC television's local newscasts in Montreal, centre on the use of waste rock from an asbestos mine in rebuilding the road bed of a 150-kilometre rail line in the Eastern Townships.

The CPR has quoted a federal health department survey saying the danger to health posed by the rock is negligable. But the CBC has quoted industrial disease specialists at the Mount Sinai Hospital in New York as saying the check didn't sample potentially-dangerous asbestos fibres smaller than five microns.

A micron is one-thousandth of a millimetre.

John Lennon was in Johannesburg last week, the Rand Daily Mail says. The newspaper said a man with a peaked cap bought a raincoat, complaining he had been told he wouldn't need one. He paid for it with a credit card in the name of John Ono Lennon. Registered at the hotel as Mr. J. Green, the former Beatle would not say why he was in South Africa.

Persis Khambatta, a former Miss India who starred as the navigator in the Star Trek motion picture, told a British columnist she's been selected to join Cheryl Ladd and Jaclyn Smith on Charlie's Angels. Producer Leonard Goldberg said that while the dark-haired beauty was being considered, "Persis has gone off her rocker if she's announcing herself as hired."

Khambatta

A Saskatchewan man who pleaded guilty to ignoring a court order to stay away from singer Anne Murray said she was communicating with him symbolically. Robert Charles Kieling, who didn't elaborate on the symbolic communication, was fined $300 in Toronto and put on probation for two years. Provincial Court judge James Murphy also ordered Kieling to stay away from Murray and seek psychiatric help. Kieling had been acquitted April 30 of intimidating the singer by going to her Toronto offices and trying to get her to fly to his farm near Blumenhof, Sask.

A 70-year-old man who had successfully avoided paying taxes since 1954 has finally been sent to prison for three years. E. L. Fowler, a tombstone salesman in Atlanta, says he'd rather suffer than bow to the taxman.

Margaret Trudeau is being sued for $1 million by an artist who claimed she libelled him in an autobiography by calling him a drug dealer. The suit was filed in Manhattan Supreme Court against her and the publisher of her book, Paddington Press Ltd. by Ahmed Yacoubi, formerly of Morocco.

Tennis lessons for Pope John Paul? Yes, says Wojtek Fibak, a professional tennis player from Poland. Fibak, in Paris attending a tournament, confirmed he has a standing invitation from the pope to visit Vatican City as a tennis instructor.

abby

Dear Abby:

I have a job I really like. It pays well, and my boss is the greatest.

During the daytime he never makes a move toward me, but when I work evenings he gets a little too friendly. Mr. R. is married and I'm not, but I do have a boyfriend. And even if I didn't have one, I wouldn't be interested in Mr. R. because he's old enough to be my father.

Last night while working late, he turned on the stereo and asked me to teach him how to disco. I told him I had a sore toe (not true). Then he said I didn't have to worry about his wife walking in on us because she lives in the suburbs and doesn't drive.

Can you give me a few suggestions on how to keep Mr. R. in his place? I don't want to hurt him — just discourage him.

Working Girl

Dear Girl:

Tell him you like your job and don't mind working nights, but your boyfriend holds a black belt in karate, doesn't live in the suburbs--and he does drive.

Dear Abby:

Every year I make a donation to the American Cancer Society in honor of my father.

No, he did not die of cancer. He had cancer, but recovered after undergoing surgery and treatment.

If more people would celebrate their loved ones' recoveries in this manner, even more lives might be saved in the future.

Thankful

Dear Abby:

You have helped to relieve the loneliness of over 20,000 military personnel stationed in Korea by providing them with a glimpse of home through a stranger's eyes.

It all began when a soldier named Allen wrote to you about the depression many GIs feel as they walk away from mail call empty-handed.

You ran his letter asking your readers to write to those forgotten kids half a world away, and you gave the address: Commanding General; Eighth Army; Seoul, Korea; APO, San Francisco, Calif. 96301.

Envelopes bearing postmarks from Canada, Puerto Rico and each of the 50 states came in by the bundles.

There were letters from children. One boy sent his week's allowance ($1) so that a serviceman would be able to buy stamps.

Many letters carried news from home. They wanted to make sure we knew that the U.S. hockey team had beaten the Russians. They were proud of their country, and proud of us for serving in the military.

School children wrote to express their feelings of loneliness, fear, doubt and hurt--feelings they couldn't share with their parents or friends. But somehow they felt a serviceman would understand.

What a morale-booster those letters were! What happy excitement you created here.

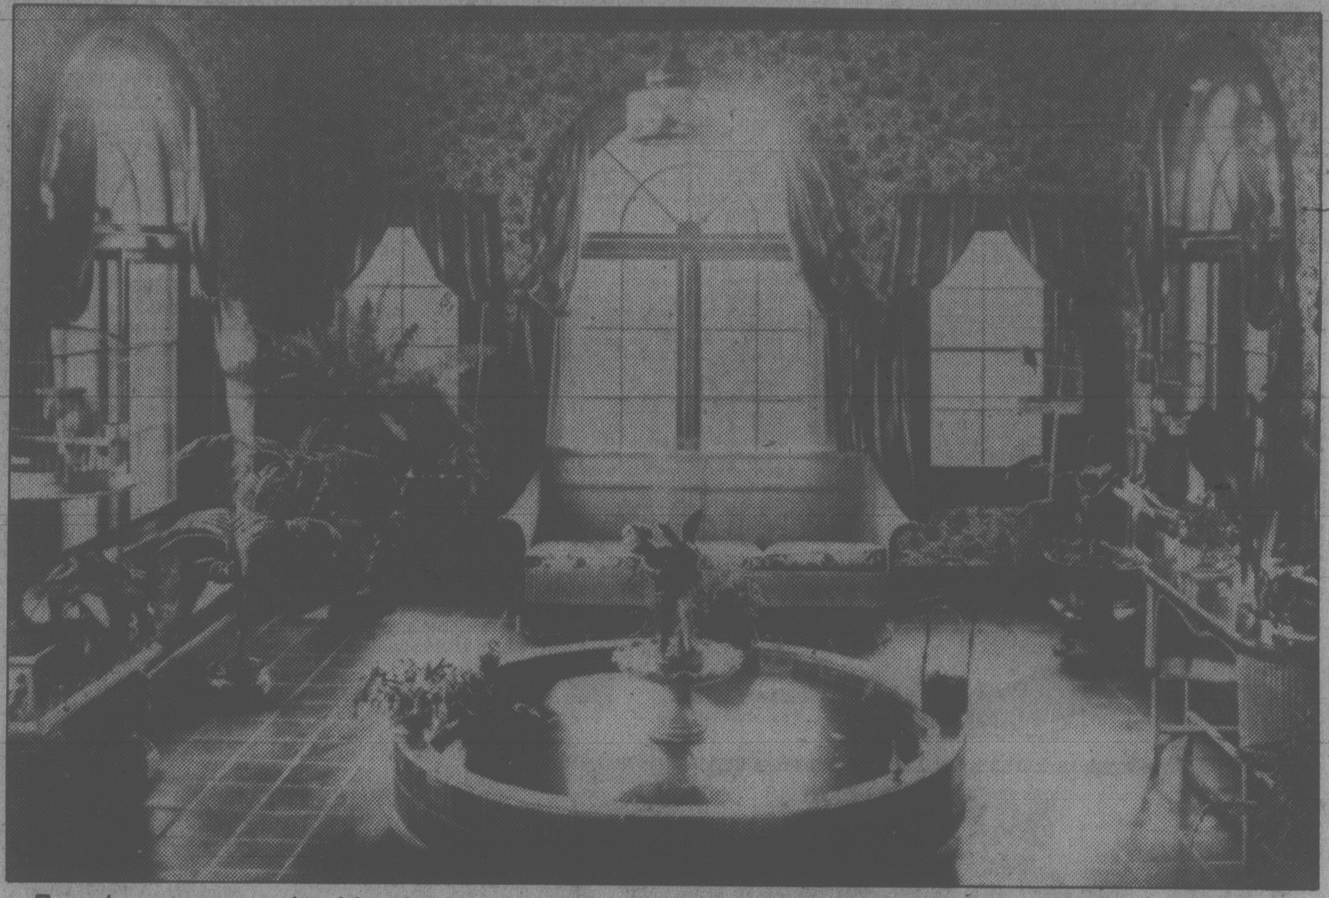
New lease for paint palace

By NORMAN GIDNEY



Boards now cover plumbing for Havenwood conservatory fountain and birds, plants, are no more

Esquimalt Lagoon has Royal Roads military college and a modern subdivision with a sewage problem that makes the picturesque bay unhealthy for swimming.

They are the better-known tenants of that sheltered shore in Colwood, but right in the middle of the disgruntled homeowners and boisterous cadets is a low-profile organization whose members want you to know more about what it does.

Since 1974, the Pacific Centre for Human Development has occupied Havenwood, a spacious waterfront home built in 1924 by Herbert J. Pendray of the Victoria soap and paint-making family.

Pendray was variously plant foreman, secretary and vice-president at Bapco, the Pendray company which produced lakes of paint from its Laurel Point factory until it closed in the mid-1970s. He was one of four sons of founder William J. Pendray, an Englishman who invested his Nevada mineral find in the local enterprise.

In 1924 Herbert had Havenwood built on a large tract of land adjoining Hatley Park, then the Dunsmuir estate and now Royal Roads. The spacious gardens were said to have rivalled Butchart's with a staff of 16 tending more than 80 acres of flower beds, lawns, streams and fountains.

Today it takes some imagining to picture the Pendrays' life of luxury. The sturdy house — the first storey walls are made of big rounded boulders — still has the original oak panelling and huge fireplace in the living room decorated with handmade tiles from California. The magnificent view of the lagoon and the Olympics is the same.

But Havenwood's ballroom has been divided into small offices and the conservatory has a false floor covering the tiles and plumbing for a fountain. Pieces of property have been sold off over the years until only 12 acres remain.

The greenhouse hasn't much glass left. Pink paint is peeling from the eaves of the house.

It's had some hard use since Herbert Pendray died in 1957 and the house and most of the property were sold for $85,000. For a brief time it was a luxury country club, then a rest home for the elderly and a residential school for disturbed children from 1968 to 1974.

For the last six years it's been used by the Pacific Centre for Human Development, which performs two main services for residents of the western community:

— First is counselling for families with children "at risk," in the terminology of the provincial ministry of human resources.

— The other is a day school for kids whose disruptive habits caused by emotional or learning problems make them misfits in the regular schools of the Sooke School District.

It was only a tenant, renting from owner Pam Ellis, but this year it was able to buy the house and property with some help from the ministry of human resources.

An interested member of the society which runs the centre, Mrs. Ellis wanted to see the centre remain at the old house with the rambling grounds and wandering streams.

"I think she has a tremendous interest in keeping beautiful spots beautiful, rather than turning them into housing estates or businesses," said Peg Peters, executive director of the centre.

The centre used to have an old house on Pears' Road, behind the Metchosin golf course, acquired years ago in part with MHR funds when founder Dr. Charles Gregory was still involved and it was known as the Island Child Care and Development Society.

The Pears Road property was sold this year and the provincial government allowed the centre to keep some of the proceeds to apply to the purchase of Havenwood.

As proprietor now, the Pacific Centre has some interesting expansion plans. It will continue to operate its two basic services, but Peters said she wants to see the old house become more of a neighborhood community centre with things for senior citizens, arts and crafts instruction and more recreation programs.

"We're open to suggestions," she said.

"We are trying to make the community more aware of us," said business manager Bob Bullough. "We're trying to get the community more involved and us more involved in the community."

In summer, the centre runs a day camp for children and last year it sponsored a croquet tournament for seniors. If it can find people willing to work at it, the big old greenhouse could be put to use again. Havenwood has lots of room for gardens.

Pearson College students, who used to help out when the centre was in Metchosin by taking some of the kids out in sailboats on Pedder Bay, have expressed interest in doing volunteer work again, said Peters.

Meditation is no panacea but it helps

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I am involved in transcendental meditation. I am a constant reader of your columns and do not remember your writing anything about this. I believe it is so important for relaxation that it deserves a column by you.

Mr. D.G.B.

Dear Mr. B.:

Although I have written about transcendental meditation, I will be glad to again impart some of my thoughts about it. I believe that TM is an excellent approach to relaxation and tranquility.

It is sometimes mistakenly believed that this is a newly discovered concept. As a matter of fact, TM is one of a wide variety of methods that have been tried for centuries, in an effort find inner peace and freedom from tension.

Some students of TM believe that this is a religious experience. Others, by biofeedback studies, have scientifically shown that many body responses can be affected by composure, relaxation and meditation. I acknowledge that altered states of consciousness can be acquired with any one of the meditational and relaxing techniques that are now captivating the attention of thousands.

Many highly trained techinical observers at universities and medical schools have, through their studies, found a definite relationship between meditation and body functions. The heart rate, the rate of breathing, blood pressure, skin responses to heat, cold and allergy, and a wide variety of physiological reactions can all be affected by transcendental meditation.

In addition, it has been well established that emotional stress and anxiety levels can be modified by TM.

In this frenetic, complex world any method that can offer a sense of inner peace and tranquility should be welcomed. Under trained supervision, TM can be extremely rewarding. I must add a word of caution, however, to those who go overboard and become convinced that transcendental meditation is the total answer to all physical and emotional problems.

Dear Doctor:

You sometimes refer to "elective surgery." I don't quite understand what you mean by this.

Miss P.W.

Dear Miss W.:

Elective surgery refers to surgery performed for conditions that are not urgent and are not classified as "emergency." This surgery is performed at a time most convenient for the patient and the surgeon.

A patient with a hernia may, for example, want to put off the operation until a vacation period.

Dear Mike:

My 1980 4-cylinder Citation with 4-speed tugs and surges at 55-mph in high. It also does this at 35-40 in third gear. The dealer says it's the high-speed jet in the carburetor, and if they correct the problem I won't get good gas mileage. Is there a way to correct the surge without messing up mileage?

Sergio

Dear Sergio:

Probably not because, as the mechanic says, if you go to a richer jet you're bound to decrease gas mileage.

Dear Mike:

I just put a new cap and points in the distributor of my 1970 Valiant 318 V-8. Despite the fact that I've adjusted the points to the narrowest specified gap (.014 inch), the dwell angle is only 21 degrees. Specs call for a dwell angle of 30-34 degrees. What can cause this difference? Could the dwell meter be wrong?

Pointed Question

Dear Pointed:

Not likely. You might have the wrong points. Or something could be bent, like the breaker plate or the points themselves.

Dear Mike:

The cruise control on my 1974 Buick worked fine until a couple of weeks ago, when it developed a habit of slowing down by about five mph after I push the button on the end of the turn-signal lever. In other words, if I'm cruising at 55 mph and push the button, the cruise control doesn't catch until the car slows to 50. Is this a big repair?

Slowing

Dear Slowing:

No. There's an adjusting screw on the side of the speed regulator. This regulator is on the left side of your engine compartment. Look for an upside-down F and S, and adjust with an Allen wrench for faster or slower.

Dear Mike:

My 1973 Chevy van with the 350 V-8 has an annoying oil leak. It loses about six drops a night. I've tightened the pan bolts as much as I dare. Is there an alternate method to stop this leak?

Puddles

Dear Puddles:

Assuming it is your pan fasket and not a main seal, you'll have to remove the pan, scrape off all the old gasket, and install a new one. If it's a bearing seal, you'll have to replace it at the time you've got the pan off.

Meg takes hold in hurry

By JOHN GOUDAS

When "The Young and the Restless" went to an hour format last February, producer John Conboy quickly signed Meg Bennett of "Search for Tomorrow" for the part of the much troubled Julia unhappily married to Victor Newman.

At the outset, creator Bill Bell and Conboy fully intended to introduce the newcomers, then bring them along slowly, giving viewers time to adjust, a testing of the waters for everyone. It was a logical game plan, but virtually ignored in Meg Bennett's case, for Julia with her marital woes is a key factor in the spring-summer plotting.

Right off the bat, Victor caused his wife to fall down the stairs after she testified for car thief Cathy. The moment Julia recovered, Victor went into another rage because his wife wouldn't have sex with him.

Julia considers divorce, yet is unable to go through with the plan, a mistake fans realize. At least, the unhappy spouse is receiving support from a sympathetic Brock, who urged the lady to testify in Cathy's case. Brock even manages a friendly kiss, with the suggestion of more to come this summer.

However, turmoil lies ahead as her husband Victor vents his spleen.

So Meg Bennett is in the thick of things of "Restless," a lady taking hold in a hurry, and more than living up to Conboy's expectation. Meg's background is impressive with credits that include four Shakespearean plays, the original production of "Grease" on Broadway, the original cast of "Godspell" Off-Broadway and three years on "Search for Tomorrow" as Liza Kaslo.

There's nothing flighty about Meg Bennett, a native Californian born in Los Angeles. She's tall, single and musical — she's played the viola for almost a decade with various groups.

Meg Bennett . . . as Search for Tomorrow's Julia

Cry along with Meg's Julia this summer as she thinks up ways to ward off volatile Victor.

Channel Chatter: Veleka Gray, whom "Love of Life" fans knew as voluptuous Mia Marriott, is now a cast member of "As the World Turns." She will appear in mid-June as nurse April Montgomery, a possible love interest for Dr. Bob Hughes...

Daytime Spinoffs! NBC's "Another World" has sprouted the new drama, "Texas," scheduled to premiere Monday, August 4. The characters will already have been introduced via "Another World" and will star Beverlee McKinsey (Iris Bancroft). Just for the record, the show was originally titled "Houston" but it was evidently too close to prime-time's "Dallas."

Still another soap is in the works — would you believe a spin-off of "General Hospital." No details have been announced...

"One Life to Live's" Jacqueline Courtney (Pat Ashley) and Robert Woods (Bo Buchanan) will be off later this month for some breathtaking location shooting in Paris, France. The scenes won't air till mid-July, but look forward to having a secret about the Buchanans revealed...

Young Lori Loughlin is the pretty new face on "The Edge of Night." She portrays Jodie Travis, a friend of Kelly McGrath. Lorie has done a number of commercials and is a model with the Ford Agency.

Plot Portents: Julie is decorating the mansion for Doug on "Days of Our Lives," so that makes Lee unhappy. Meanwhile, Kallam is eager to present a good family image, meaning the fellow is not telling all.

Suzanne and her new buddy Douglas are out to thwart Kay Chancellor again on "The Young and the Restless." Innocent Steve helps Jill pull herself together, unaware he is dealing with a cobra.

Kim is still in an emotional upheaval on "As the World Turns," but has some startling news for Nick. Also, David is enraged when his attempts to break up John and Dee backfires.

Jill learns about the world of rock music on "Ryan's Hope." Barry makes Delia jealous and old yearnings reawaken in Siobhan.

Nina faces a crisis on "All My Children." Meanwhile, Edna makes a desicion and Langley is in a state of suspense.

Asa befriends Brad on "One Life to Live," while Mario recalls his other life fondly and Tina rejects the past.

Leo is stopped dead in his tracks when he attempts to tell Kirk his true identity on "The Edge of Night."

'Lost job a blessing'

TORONTO (CP) — Losing your job can be the best thing that happens to you, says employment consultant Thomas Jackson.

Jackson says being fired should be seen by workers as the best opportunity they have had in years because it unlocks the "golden handcuffs" that have kept them stuck too long in unsatisfying jobs.

"People should change jobs every five years anyway," he says. "You might have been terrific at what you do 10 years ago, but part of you left about five years ago.

"People hold on to their jobs because there's nine-per-cent unemployment. But that's 91-per-cent employment, and not many other games give such good odds."

Jackson and his New York-based consulting firm, Career Development Inc., are frequently hired by companies to help laid-off workers find new jobs.

Recently, he has been working with more than 9,000 workers affected by the closing of five Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. plants in the U.S. and the Firestone Canada Inc. plant in Whitby, Ont.

A community college in Miami has hired him to work with people whose jobs disappeared because of the recent riots there.

"The first thing we'll do (in Miami) is take the anger out," Jackson says. "People don't hire angry people."

He says a shift has begun in the job market and labor force. The automotive and tire industries, for example, have already plunged into a major decline, causing many workers to re-evaluate their skills and change careers.

Over-all, people in the 1980s are increasingly mobile in their work, he says. Those entering the job market now will probably have three or four careers and eight to 10 jobs during their lifetime.

He says the main problem confronting job hunters is lack of self-esteem.

Canadian art on the rise

TORONTO (CP) — After being undervalued for so many years, Canadian art appears to be reaching its proper place in world markets.

Buyers from across Canada, the United States and Britain attended a two-day Sotheby Park Bernet (Canada) spring auction sale that netted more than $1.1 million Tuesday night and set 10 world records in art sales, auction spokesman Liz Addison said Wednesday.

Summer in the Arctic, a 1939 painting by Frederick Horseman Varley, sold for $170,000, breaking price records for any Varley painting, any Group of Seven painting and any Canadian painting sold in the world.

Two more Group of Seven paintings, Summer Morning (1948) by A. J. Casson and Icebergs, Smith Sound, Arctic Sketch XXVI by Lawren Harris, went for $50,000 and $28,000 respectively.

Addison said Emily Carr's Forest Landscape sold for $68,000, exceeding last year's price of $42,000 for a painting of comparable size and subject.

A 19th-century painting by Cornelius Krieghoff called Indian Hunters Resting by a Campfire went for $140,000, topping the existing record of $62,000 for a Krieghoff sold last fall.

Addison the results "make it clear that Canadians are pouring money more heavily than ever before into Canadian art.

"In spite of the recession, people are investing in Canadian art as a hedge against inflation."

Hidden l'Eggs held surprises

NEW YORK (AP) — The world's largest Easter egg hunt, and the only event of its kind to be held in Central Park, took place this year for about 5,000 children between the ages of four and eight. The children received toys, balloons and prizes, which they found in plastic hosiery eggs donated by L'eggs Products, which co-sponsored the event with the Epilepsy Institute here.

Dear Dr. Powell: I am a 14-year-old girl who is really confused. When getting the Pill, what happens after you see your doctor? Do you get examined by a gynecologist or something? If a prescription is obtained in one province, can it be filled in another?

Answer: When a couple decide they need some method of contraception, they would be asied to find out as much as they can about all the methods available. Many health courses in schools cover this information. They can go to Planned Parenthood and get pamphlets or arrange to meet with a counsellor, discuss the methods and have their questions answered.

Several methods used by women are available through a doctor or a clinic: These include the Pill, the intra-uterine device and the diaphragm. For any of these methods, a physical examination which includes an examination of the pelvic organs will be carried out. The doctor will determine the size, shape and position of the uterus and ovaries by carrying out an internal examination.

Included in this examination will be a Papanicolasu smear, usually referred to as a Pap test. It should not hurt you, although it may be uncomfortable. This examination should be repeated every year throughout your life.

The Pill is available only on prescription, which is for one year's supply. A woman has to return to the doctor or clinic when her prescription is up. This usually concides with the time she is due for a check-up. Prescriptions are good only in the province where they are written. Emergency supplies can be obtained through a birth control clinic.

Dear Dr. Cotter: A 13-year-old girl wrote to you asking if she would see her dead boyfriend in heaven. I've lost a brother and can understand some of her concerns.

I am not so presumptuous as to believe I can answer her question. There are no answers, only theories to consider. The one that has given me some consolation and hope comes from reports of dying people (the books say "dead people") who have been pulled back to life. These people share a common experience of going through a tunnel and being greeted by a dead loved one. Such a book may not answer your reader's question but may give her something to hold on to.

Answer: It seems to me that the experience of loving someone and being loved is itself worthwhile whether or not we will "see" that person again. My mother has recently died, and I miss her very much, but my love for her makes her real to me, though absent.

Many people wrote after I responded to the girl you mention, pointing out many things in the Bible which talk of a "plce" called heaven and various other assurances of life after death. Your example is more recent and interesting, though just as unscientific as the Bible references.

The point I am trying to make is that these speculations may be helpful, but they are not at all the same thing as faith; and faith, for a Christian, depends on one thing alone: The knowledge (non-scientific, but real enough) of the love of God shown through the ressurection from the dead of Jesus Christ. It is one thing to prop up our hopes with speculations and Bible texts; it is another to allow your wole life to be taken over by faith, part of which is knowledge of the victory of love.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria V8W 2N4. Readers wishing to talk with someone about their problems can call NEED at 386-6233.

Volunteers start flow out of doors volunteering

The rites of summer are being warmed up all over the city now.

Joggers and cyclists move through the streets and open areas in ever increasing numbers.

Parks and playgrounds are filled with boistrous baseball games and rhythmic tennis matches.

Kites jostle in waterfront breezes and hikers exchange pleasantries as they explore the many trails and paths of local wilderness parks.

A sense of well being has settled over the area as people stream outdoors to play or just putter in the garden.

No reason is given — or needed — for dropping the chores and going outdoors in search of adventure. The season defines our behavior.

As volunteers, we can pursue our favorite pastimes in the company of others who share our enthusiasm.

Many local groups are planning activities that will take advantage of the unique recreational opportunities here.

These groups are inviting volunteers to join them for a few hours per week.

Some programs will need volunteers with specific knowledge, but the main ingredient will be enthusiasm, and the willingness to share it with others.

There are many ways to participate.

A community school wants volunteers who are interested in sports to assist them by working on sports programs that are part of their courses for adults.

A residential home for emotionally handicapped adults is looking for volunteers to take small groups of residents on nature walks or bicycle riding.

A recreational organization would like to hear from a volunteer who could be an instructor for a nature walk series for mothers and small children.

This person should have some interest and knowledge of nature and nature trails in the area, and enjoy small children.

An association working in the mental health field needs a volunteer who is interested in tennis.

The individual would be teaching the game to members of the organization who are in a skill development program.

A local nature centre is looking for outdoor education leaders for children in the 8 - 18 age bracket. Training will be provided. They are also looking for Nature House attendants who will be working with the public, answering questions about ecology and the local environment. Training will also be given to these volunteers.

A home for emotionally disturbed adults would like volunteers to take residents on outings on a one to one basis or in small groups.

The volunteers should be able to relate well to others and be able to motivate them in a friendly way.

An outdoors club would like to hear from volunteers who will take a positive part in environmental and preservation concerns. Needed are people who can assist the public in their book store and with literature and displays. They also have a need for an office assistant.

These opportunities are just the beginning of many that will be opening up in the next few weeks. The bureau is starting to get requests for youth program workers and gardening assistants.

For more information on these and other positions, contact the Victoria Volunteer Bureau at 386-2269, between 8:30 and 4:30 p.m. weekdays.

Time will tell in Reid project

audrey johnson

When rape seems inevitable, it is better to lie back and enjoy it, says an old proverb, attributed — probably falsely — to Chinese sources.

In answer to the many people who have asked me how I feel about the convention centre soon to rise on the Reid property, that is substantially my answer.

The waterfront is being raped and so — a gut reaction tells me — are a large percentage of Victorians.

If in five years' time, the convention centre is not a white elephant, but a thriving asset to the community at large, I will chew up and swallow this page (providing it exists other than on microfilm).

If the convention centre, a subject of discussion for a quarter-century, had been built 15, 20 or more years ago and the city had become established as a convention location, that would be a different can of worms.

But now we are to build it parallel with one going up in the larger and more accessible city of Vancouver. Certainly Victoria has its own unique charm but it's a large question whether the charm is enough to make the extra expenditure of time and money in reaching the island, worth while to the majority of convention organizers.

There's little doubt that a lot of people in this area feel that if a convention centre was deemed necessary, it should have been designed and financed to include some of Victoria's seriously needed facilities for local performance organizations. Based on attendance figures alone, they represent between 12 and 15,000 citizens.

But now that government money (our money) is committed to this building it is the only answer we are likely to get for another decade at least; probably for most of us, for our lifetime.

Protest and opinion go as usual, unacknowledged and will of a certainty make no difference now.

The rape is inevitable and we have, it seems, no recourse but to submit.

Something different that promises to be delightful is happening Monday in the small hall at 307 Richmond.

There, at 8 p.m., Le Club Canadien Francais de Victoria is presenting 1755. The quizzical numbername belongs to an Acadian folk group from Nova Scotia. Currently on a tour of the western provinces, they will be giving a single performance in cafe-francais style.

The five skilled musicians started playing together three years ago and quickly developed an international reputation. In 1979 they placed first in the Festival International de la Francophonie in Nice, France.

A second annual Summer Theatre School is announced by Victoria Theatre Guild. The courses to include technical theatre and acting, will run from July 2 to Aug. 16. It will occupy three evenings a week plus weekend workshops.

There will be a production — choice of script to be announced later — Aug. 13 through 16.

Application forms and detailed information can be had by calling Denis Johnson at 595-7425 or the box office, 384-2142.

Light studied

QUEBEC (CP) — The meteorology service of the Quebec environment department has begun a study aimed at finding out just how much sunlight reaches various regions of the province. With the information from its string monitoring stations, the service hopes to put out a "sunshine atlas" which could be used to help tourism, agriculture and solar energy development in different areas.

Billy Bishop wins his gongs strafing Broadway

By DAN TURNER
FP Service

NEW YORK — The Canadian play Billy Bishop Goes to War strafed Broadway Thursday night, emerging with a string of medals but undetermined damage to its fuselage.

Reviews were so mixed that you wouldn't have known the reviewers were in the same theatre — the Morosco on West 45th Street.

In the end it was impossible to determine how many Broadway missions the play — possibly the best Canadian theatre has produced — will fly.

Response in the theatre itself was explosive — a rare standing ovation from a near-full house.

But Walter Kerr, writing for the all-important New York Times, came to a neutral conclusion after a rambling review, saying it would have been "a saving grace" if he had understood more about Bishop's character after the ace Canadian pilot emerged from the First World War.

Douglas Watt of the high-circulation New York Daily News said that for a play about war it was unique: "I'm afraid it's fun."

Chauncey Howell of NBC-TV said the play told him more than he wanted to know about Bishop, but conceded it was "very well done" and called Eric Peterson, the star of the two-man performance, "enormously resourceful" and "brilliant."

Joel Siegel of ABC-TV said it was "more of a performance than a play, but a remarkable performance" and said "tonight on Broadway, Billy Bishop earned his wings."

Stewart Klein of channel 11 TV recommended the play "without reservation," but Dennis Cunningham of CBS called the entire production "shallow and amateurish."

Co-producer Eric Peterson, director of the Vancouver East Cultural Centre, took the reviews with a cool equanimity that would have done Bishop proud, saying he "wished the newspaper reviews had been better" but expressing pleasure at the TV response until Cunningham appeared. At which point Peterson shook his head and marvelled at the spectrum of opinion which is New York.

In fact, for purpose of advertising to keep the play going, Billy Bishop may have fallen the width of a hair short — an enthusiastic Times revue would have put it over the top.

For anyone in Canada who hasn't heard about Billy Bishop Goes to War after it toured 12 cities over a year and a half, this is what it's about:

Eric Peterson plays Billy Bishop, the brash Canadian flying ace who shot down an astounding 72 enemy aircraft in the First World War without ever learning the niceties of taking off and landing.

(Whoever wrote the New York program notes is as cheeky with the Americans as Bishop was with the British — they point out that America's top ace, Eddie Rickenbacker, only shot down 26.)

Peterson, who has worked out of Saskatoon, Vancouver, and lately Toronto, is the only man on stage throughout, other than pianist Jack Gray, who also happens to be the play's author, composer, director, and accompanying vocalist.

The audience sees Bishop transformed from a backwoods boy from Owen Sound who can't stand the mud his cavalry division has to wallow into a cool killer dancing the clouds of Europe on laughter-silvered wings. And finally to an older and not-much-wiser Second World War officer who still isn't sure what it was all about, but knows it sure was a helluva show.

And for anyone back in Canada still interested in a non-New Yorker's review, here is one:

As a singer, Peterson would be jeered off the stage at your local beer hall's amateur night, although he claims he would switch into his No. 1 opera voice were there the least shred of evidence that Bishop was ever much of a singer.

As an actor, he is superb. Thousands upon thousands of words jump off a script that never goes flat, in more than two hours of monologue delivered with glowing-eyed intensity.

His body language — crucial to a show with no other movement — is subtle, graceful and economic, reminiscent of Donald Sutherland.

And anyone who wants to know more at the end about the Billy Bishop who made it through the war has missed one of the major points of Gray's script — like most human beings, Billy Bishop acted in the best interests of his own survival, with some understanding of how, but no profound understanding of why.

The integrity of the play is that it doesn't tamper with Bishop as a human being — the fun is watching Bishop be one with a recklessness, occasional sadness, and over-all sense of humor that celebrates the non-celebral juices of the species.

He has done it all because he didn't want to spend the war up to his knees in mud — "the only way out is up" in the beginning, and when you get there "the only way to learn survival is to survive."

In the process he blows a large hole through the pomposity of his British colonial masters, and in the end if that all happened within the tragedy of what is war, well . . . it did.

In fact, there is everything here you ever wanted to know about war, without the pretentiousness of The Deer Hunter or Apocalypse Now.

Peterson is a captivating story-teller, blurting out a personal tale with honesty and gentle humor about survival in a situation full of glory, senselessness, and life's idiosyncracies.

There is no question the play will become a Canadian classic, and the colonial-among-the-colonizers theme that accounts for so much of its humor should make it a natural in London's West End.

Gift azaleas can bloom again, in garden or pot gardening

hilda beastall

The gift azalea in a pot, appearing usually at Christmas and Easter in florists' displays, is the easiest of potted plants to keep more or less permanently.

Not only will this azalea continue to grow and flower each spring if planted in a suitable place in the garden, but it may also be retained as a pot plant.

The indoor gardener finds it difficult to believe the azalea prefers the outdoor air and humidity, rather than the dry more or less static air of the house or apartment. But such is the case, and if garden space is available the azalea will thrive when planted outdoors.

Retaining as a potted plant is important to the owner of an azalea not having a garden, and this also is possible.

First, a size larger pot is needed of the same shallow shape as the present pot. These are commercially known as azalea pots, because of the shallow rooting habit of these plants. A deep pot creates unhealthy conditions with wet unused soil.

The soil for repotting is a mixture of finely-screened compost, screened leafmold, and a little fine sand. If no leafmold is available use screened peat moss well soaked in water before mixing.

Presuming the azalea has finished flowering, it should now be making new growth shoots. Turn the pot upside down holding the soil surface on the palm of the hand. Give the pot edge a sharp tap on the corner of the table and lift off the pot. The root-ball will be tight with fibrous roots.

Over a newspaper, shake off some of the loose soil. It will likely be mostly sand, since the humus has been broken down and used by the plant.

Into the clean new pot put a little of the soil mixture, then replace the plant with its rootball. Around the outer edge of the rootball add some soil mixture, frequently tapping the pot on the table sharply to settle the soil around the roots without tightly packing.

Be sure to leave at least a one-half-inch space between the top of the soil and the rim of the pot so that water will not flow away over the rim when watering, but soak down through the soil within the pot.

One more thing to do is to stand the repotted plant in a container of water at room temperature, with the water level just above the rim of the pot.

Let it soak for at least one hour, then allow it to drain thoroughly on the side of the sink before replacing in a good-light window.

For garden planting at this time of year, choose a partially sunny spot preferably near other azaleas or rhododendrons, for they have the same soil and light preference. All azaleas are rhododendrons, the name azalea being given to a group of plants within the rhododendron genus.

See that the planting hole has the soil well broken up and mixed with peatmoss that has been saturated in water, compost soil or leafmold, and some sand if the soil is basically heavy.

Remove the plant from the pot as described above, set on the prepared soil in the hole at the same shallow depth it was in the pot, no deeper. Fill in around the side with more of the same mixture, with a thin layer over the top of the rootball.

Then with the gentlest water pressure, allow the hose to trickle on the surface over the rootball so as to soak it thoroughly. This may take an hour.

From now on, spray the plant gently over the foliage on dry or windy days with clear water to encourage new growth, and don't forget the same treatment next spring while weather is dry and windy.

Swiss arrest Frenchmen in bank secrecy trap

By WILLIAM DOWELL
Christian Science Monitor

PARIS — French officials are trying to play down the trial, slated for June 17 in Zurich, Switzerland, of two French undercover customs agents arrested by Swiss police on charges of "economic espionage."

The agents, Bernard Rui and Pierre Schultz, were arrested in Basel, Switzerland, April 15 for allegedly trying to buy Swiss bank secrets. A series of spectacular mini-strikes by unions representing French customs workers led to the agents' release pending trial, but only after the French government had posted a $30,000 bond.

The arrests were part of an elaborate trap set by Swiss police, and the case provides a fascinating insight into the quiet espionage war that has been going on here in the past several months over the issue of Swiss bank secrecy.

The stakes are not small. Roughly 40 per cent of the jobs in Switzerland involve banking. Foreign holdings in Swiss banks are estimated to total around $600 billion, a figure that is more than France's entire gross national product. The French estimate that anywhere from 200,000 to 600,000 French citizens have accounts in Swiss banks--many of them illegal under French law.

The major attraction of Swiss banking, of course, is secrecy. Swiss numbered accounts began in the 1930s, when Nazi Gestapo agents tried to identify Jewish bank accounts outside Germany by depositing small amounts of money in the suspects' names. If the bank accepted a deposit for one of the suspects, it was proof the suspect had an account. The unlucky account holder then was arrested in Germany and literally held for ransom in a concentration camp.

Since then, Swiss numbered accounts have served a variety of less meritorious purposes. The French particularly are concerned that every time it looks as though the left will gain power in France, there is a massive exodus of capital across the border.

French customs agents still talk about intercepting a truck filled to overflowing with French bank notes in May 1968. The money represented the financial reserves of some of Paris' leading department stores.

The current flare-up between France and Switzerland goes back to 1976, when a computer technician working for a Swiss bank corporation sold a list of 2,500 names of French account holders to French customs for a price that is believed to have totalled nearly a quarter of a million dollars.

The names were turned over to the DNED (Direction National des Enquete Douanieres), a secret investigative unit that specializes in tracking down illegal money transfers. Hundreds of French clients were investigated, and immediately began complaining that the secrecy of Swiss banking had turned into a myth.

Unfortunately, French customs had begun by investigating the most influential candidates first. The Swiss were upset.

In order to strike back, Swiss bank officials asked their French clients for photocopies of subpoenas resulting from the investigations. Signatures on the documents revealed that most of the investigations were being carried out by five customs inspectors. Swiss police drew up arrest warrants for all five, in case any of them returned to Switzerland. One of the five was Bernard Rui.

The trap for Rui was set, using a jovial computer technician for the Union des Banques Suisses, named Hermann Stroehlin. Stroehlin was married to a Frenchwoman and owned a house in France. When police found that he worked for a Swiss bank, they asked him if he would like to sell secret information. He refused.

Last January, Stroehlin, who already had informed his superiors of the French offer, contacted the French police, explaining that he wanted to make some extra money. He explained that he no longer worked in the bank's computer section, but he had a friend who did.

A meeting was set for April 10 at the Sheraton Hotel restaurant in Zurich. Rui handled the negotiations and Pierre Schultz acted as an interpreter. Stroehlin introduced the two inspectors to his friend, who turned out to be Ralf Elsener, security chief of the canton of Zurich.

When Rui and Schultz showed up in Basel for a later meeting, Stroehlin was absent. Elsener suggested that the two inspectors have a drink. They had just sat down at a table when a dozen Swiss police in uniform surrounded them.

The only incriminating evidence was a scribbled note found in Rui's pocket, explaining French regulations authorizing payment of up to $5,000 for information concerning money transfers that violate French law. Nevertheless, Schultz was held in a Swiss jail until May 9, and Rui was kept locked up until May 13. Theoretically, both are supposed to return to Zurich for the June 17 trial.

Regardless of what happens at the trial, the basic conflict between Swiss banking secrecy and the French government's determination to control the finances of its citizens remains unresolved.

U.S. recession to worsen?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Index of Leading Economic Indicators — a barometer of future economic trends — plunged a record 4.8 per cent in April, indicating the worst of the recession is yet to come, the government said today.

The decline in the index was the largest since the Commerce Department began keeping track in 1948 and eclipsed the previous record of 3 per cent set in September 1974 when the nation was mired down in the worst economic disaster since the Great Depression.

In an unusual development, all 10 components of the index fell last month, the department said. Layoffs contributed the most to the over-all decline.

With the exception of January, the index has been dropping steadily for the past seven months, marking the longest string of poor performances since the severe recession five years ago.

The index now stands at 126.3, its lowest point since April 1976.

While layoffs contributed the most to the drop, declines were also registered in the average work-week, vendor performance, the change in total liquid assets, stock prices, building permits and the change in sensitive raw-materials prices.

Contracts and orders for plant and equipment, stock prices and the money supply — all measured in 1972 dollars — also fell, the department said.

In Columbus, Ohio, President Carter, addressing his first political rally of the 1980 campaign, declared Thursday that "we're turning the tide" in solving America's inflation, energy and foreign problems.

He predicted that the inflation rate, now running at an annual rate of nearly 18 per cent, will start to decline this summer — "and you can count on it."

U.S. falcon poachers nabbed

QUEEN CHARLOTTE (UPC) — A $1,000 fine slapped on one of two California falcon poachers may deter others from taking the prized hunting birds from a remote island.

Al Breitkreutz, a B.C. Fish and Wildlife Conservation officer, said Thursday two American-licensed falconers in their late 20s from Walnut Creek, Calif., pleaded guilty to illegal possession of a new-born Peales peregrine falcon.

Randale Lee was fined $1,000 Wednesday in Queen Charlotte provincial court. Kirk Hohemberger, who had to make special arrangements to pay a possible fine, was to be sentenced today in Prince Rupert.

Breitkreutz said the two, travelling under assumed names, took the young falcon from its nest on Langara Island — off the northern tip of the Queen Charlotte Islands — Tuesday and were about to take it back to California when they were caught.

He was alerted to the pair's activity by a helicopter pilot who had taken the men to and from the island and was suspicious of their story that they were looking for artifacts.

Breitkreutz and federal fisheries officer Laurie Graham then went to the motel where the men were staying.

"We interviewed them and found they had the bird in a washroom," said Breitkreutz. "There was a bit of a scuffle and one of the guys escaped with the bird.

"We pursued him but by the time we caught him, he'd already ditched the bird. We checked the area later and found the falcon, but it was dead."

The Peales peregrine, treasured by falconers because of its hunting abilities, is not common to California but concentrates in small numbers on Langara Island.

Battle brewing on pirate TV

Science Minister Pat McGeer says he'll have a dish antenna in operation next week to pirate U.S. television signals and the newly elected chairman of the Canadian Cable Television Association has served notice Canada's cable operators are poised to become pirates too.

Cable association chairman Jack Davis said Thursday the operators are so hungry for pay television they're ready to defy the federal communications law by pirating first-run movies, sports and entertainment broadcasts from U.S. satellites.

And if the government throws cable executives into jail, the subscribers would follow them into the cells, he said.

"In this case 'the law is an ass'," he told a news conference.

Davis' comments came as McGeer said he will press ahead with a plan to instal the satellite dish antenna at the legislature next week even though he does not have a licence.

McGeer said he will be breaking the law but said he doesn't care.

The minister said he is certain MoT officials will not close down a B.C. government pirate station.

Davis, elected on the last day of the association's annual convention, said operators' anger and frustration is fueled by two factors.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has so far refused to allow cable companies to reap the profits of pay-TV, which has provided huge sums for the U.S. industry, he said.

At the same time, pirate companies have thumbed their noses at the CRTC and set up satellite dishes to pull pay-TV signals into TV-starved, isolated communities.

John Meisel, chairman of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, said earlier this week a crackdown is coming on the pirates.

But there were conflicting reports Thursday quoting spokesmen for the federal communications department as saying they plan to take no action against communities like Tofino and others who have set up their own dish systems to view U.S. programming.

The residents of Tofino, Chetwynd, Cassiar and McBride, to name only a few of the communities plucking U.S. programming from the air, have made it clear they'll fight any attempt to black out their screens.

Arden Smith, chairman of the Chetwynd communications committee, said ' "I don't think people would stand by idly."

Werner Shneeberger, who runs a dish system in Cassiar, said he told the CRTC back in 1978 what he was doing.

"There's no way some one can come in and say, okay, for 19 months you've enjoyed it, now we're going to take it out. We won't give in, we've got a lot of money tied up."

McGeer said he doesn't think much of Meisel's threat of a crackdown.

"We don't want a bunch of federal snoops in running shoes, tripping all over B.C., hunting for satellite receiving stations. It's preposterous," McGeer said.

The minister said his venture into TV piracy is designed to demonstrate the wide variety of programming available from Canada's Anik-A and Anik-B satellites.

However, it is clear he also intends to strike a blow on behalf of the estimated 200 users of illegal dish antennas in B.C.

"I don't think any satellite receiving stations, here or anywhere else in Canada, should be shut down," McGeer said.

"We should be free to pick up satellite signals just the same way we're free to pick up radio signals."

The illegal dish antennas, when tuned in to the right satellite, can bring in signals intended for U.S. cable companies. The result is the sudden availability of hundreds of extra TV channels — unlimited entertainment.

The sky is — literally — the limit.

McGeer's big dish is scheduled to be installed at the rear of the Legislative Buildings Monday.

By Tuesday it should be tuned in and operating, providing pirated programs to TV sets in the MLAs' lounge, the press gallery and a few other offices.

Health cost hikes hard on old: NDP

Increases in direct charges for health services ranging from in-patient care at acute care hospitals to the per-diem rate for long-term and extended care facilities were announced Thursday by Health Minister Rafe Mair.

Mair described the hikes as fair but NDP MLAs immediately attacked the moves, warning they will work a hardship, particularly for the elderly.

NDP health critic Dennis Cocke said the increases mean the government is picking the pockets of the people.

And Victoria NDP MLA Gordon Hanson said the increased per-diem charge for long-term and extended care will be a blow to the senior citizens of Victoria.

"The majority of elderly people in this town, contrary to what the millionaires think, have as their only source of income the Canada Pension Plan and supplements.

"If you want to hit the elderly where it hurts them most, hit them in health care. And this is what they are doing," Hanson said.

Mair said the increases are designed to bring fees in line with the rise in the cost of living since the last time they were adjusted.

After this, the fees will be pegged to the Consumer price Index and adjusted every year.

The changes which go into effect July 1:

—The charge for in-patient care in acute-care hospitals will rise to $5.50 a day from the present $4.

—Day surgery charges will go to $5 from $2.

—The per-diem rate in long-term care and extended care facilities will increase to $8.50 from the current $6.50.

—Medical plan premiums will be increased about 15 per cent.

—The maximum charge for ambulance service will rise to $125 from the present $100 under a new fee structure.

The charge for emergency treatment in hospitals is also likely to go up. The present charge of $2 will remain in effect pending discussions between the ministry of health and the B.C. Health Association.

Two minor charges will be eliminated.

The $1-a-day charge for day clinical services (typically for psychiatric and diabetic care) and the similar daily charge for extended care for children, are abolished.

Inflation has hit everything else and it's only right that health care should be increased accordingly, Mair argued.

The new fee schedule accurately reflects increases in the cost of living, he said, and pegging the rates to the CPI will be a better way of handling future increases.

"No one is going to be overjoyed to have costs go up. That I can understand. But you have to keep pace with the cost of living and I think this is a fair way of doing it," Mair said.

Cocke, however, said health care costs were never designed to be tied to the cost of living or to reflect a user-pay principle.

"It's irresponsible, inflationary and something the people should look at very seriously when they are considering this government's performance," he said.

Having a blast in old London

LONDON (CP) — For fool-proof bombings, assassinations, kidnappings or hostage-takings (in London, you can afford to dither) British journalist Christopher Ward has the answer.

Inspired by the recent spate of terrorist activity here, Ward has prepared a rather sharply satirical guide for prospective tourists and terrorists.

"We thank you for choosing our fine city as your base," Ward tells would-be terrorists in an article published by Girl Magazine, "and we hope you will enjoy your stay here."

"Be sure to invest in a London transport Red Rover go anywhere ticket. It enables you to carry out assassinations at any number of hotels and embassies in a 24-hour period with no extra charge for transporting suit case bombs weighing less than 20 pounds."

But a trusty black cab may be better suited for other missions, he says.

"A London cabbie will take you anywhere with a gun pointed at the nape of his neck."

He points out one shopping precinct of particular interest to the terrorist enthusiast.

"You will find there the latest timing device to detonate your bomb should Colonel Khadafi's own devices malfunction at the last minute (not open on Sundays.)"

Under the heading "excursions", he tells tourists, "Don't miss the famous, burned-out Iranian embassy in Prince's Gate" where five Iranian-Arab heroes died defending their right to hold 24 hostages captive for nine days . . . see the SAS (Special Air Service) in action by staging your own siege . . . Walk around the hole in the ground in Mayfair where two Iraqis blew themselves to pieces in their Volvo."

"We do hope you will enjoy your stay . . . London prides itself on being a world centre of international terrorism."

High fliers facing cut-off?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal government should limit the number of drinks a passenger can be served on airline flights, Shirley Pool of the Canadian Air Line Flight Attendants's Association told the Dubin commission on air safety Thursday.

Pool said attendants have to decide whether to obey the law by not serving somebody who is intoxicated or honor the policy of most airlines to promote service to the travelling public.

Chief commission counsel John Sopinka said: "My experience in first class is that it is the flight attendants who are always pushing drinks on the passengers."

Stu Keate, retired Vancouver Sun publisher, was called by the B.C. section of the Canadian Bar Association to support its argument for an independent body to investigate air crashes and report publicly.

Mine tailings killing lake

One of the biggest lakes on Vancouver Island is in danger of dying from an overdose of heavy metal.

Tailings from a Western Mines copper, lead and zinc operation are discharged into the south end of Buttle Lake, near Campbell River.

An environment ministry report on the lake, based on more than 10 years of monitoring, was released Thursday.

It states the concentrations of dissolved zinc have increased significantly in the past decade and the water quality is approaching borderline conditions for fish and other organisms.

Environment Minister Stephen Rogers, however, indicates no action is planned to correct the situation.

"The discharge by Western Mines is well within the allowable limits of their permit," Rogers said.

"Nothing can be done at this time. If it gets worse, we'll act."

The ministry of health, meanwhile, reports that water in Buttle Lake is safe for drinking and bathing and it is even safe to eat fish taken from the lake.

However the ministry says it is concerned with any potential threat to public water supplies and will maintain a close liaison with the environment ministry during more detailed studies.

Buttle Lake is a distant part of the watershed system which supplies Campbell River.

Bob Nixon, spokesman for the Sierra Club, said today Rogers should be taking a tougher approach to the situation.

He said environment ministry staff could, if so directed, outline what Western Mines has to do to correct the problem.

"His approach in dealing with a pollution problem is not responsible," he said.

Nixon said Rogers as enviroment minister should have the philosophy that anyone who damages the environment is held accountable for the results.

Couvelier set to sue Campbell

The Tillicum shopping centre row — already a legal morass — became even more tangled today.

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier threatened to sue Capital Region District chairman James Campbell and Campbell told the Times today he hopes Couvelier does just that.

"I hope he does, because I am absolutely confident nothing I've said is incorrect," Campbell said.

Couvelier threatened the suit after the CRD chairman released a statement on the mayor's role in the controversy.

"It is my intention to protect my public record very aggressively," Couvelier said, adding his lawyer has been asked to determine if Campbell's statement is libelous.

"If I have the basis for a suit against chairman Campbell, I will launch it," he said.

The Tillicum legal battle is set for full trial before the B.C. Supreme Court

Couvelier said the latest development is unfortunate because it detracts from the central issue — whether the CRD has the legal right to impose restrictions on the size of a municipal development.

The CRD chairman released the statement today in response to Saanich's decision Thursday to reject an offer by Victoria Ald. Bob Wright that would settle the Tillicum issue out-of-court.

Pan-Pacific conflict charges flying

The conflict of interest controversy swirling around the Pan-Pacific Society entered the B.C. legislature Thursday with a call by Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber for all members of the group to declare their business interests.

Dr. Arne Lane, president of the non-profit organization spearheading the drive for a Victoria convention centre, has admitted that through his company, Shadee-Lane Ranch Ltd., he had for four months this year a one-quarter interest in Hartwig Court, adjacent to the centre site at Fort and Wharf.

In April, when fellow members of Pan-Pacific suggested he could be accused of conflict of interest, Lane agreed to sell his share to the other three partners in the deal. On May 20 final legal arrangements to complete the transfer were made.

In the legislature, Finance Minister Hugh Curtis said when he first heard of the report he expressed grave concern and asked for an investigation.

Curtis is the minister responsible for the Provincial Capital Commission, which is to build the $8 million centre.

"I was informed that the individual under discussion today had in fact divested himself of any interest in an adjacent piece of property," Curtis told Barber.

Outside the house, Curtis said he is going to investigate further.

The minister also gave several strong indications during his question period exchange with Barber that Pan-Pacific has lost its position of influence with the government.

The organization of downtown businessmen was formed in late 1978 under the aegis of then cabinet minister Sam Bawlf.

It has been closely involved in planning the convention centre for the last 18 months and was expected to take over operation of the finished building.

Curtis said there have been suggestions that the original plan to have Pan-Pacific operate the centre is already locked in place.

"That is not the case."

He acknowledged a claim by Barber that the capital commission last October endorsed a report which recommends government authorization to turn over the completed centre to Pan-Pacific for a dollar.

But that hasn't been

New York

Stock prices showed a modest loss today on word of a record drop in the U.S. government's index of leading economic indicators.

The government reported today that its leading-indicators index, which is designed to detect future economic trends, took an unprecedented 4.8-per-cent drop in April.

Wall Streeters had been looking for a sharp decline, but advance estimates had been in the three-to four-per-cent range.

Analysts said the slump in the indicators, which came on the heels of a 2.6-per-cent drop in March, raised new concern among investors over the potential severity of the recession.

Gold mining stocks, which often benefit from economic uncertainty, made some broad gains. ASA rose ⅞ to $43⅜ and Homestake Mining picked up 1½ to $52½.

London

The London stock market was lower near the close of quiet trading today.

The Financial Times index slipped 1.6 to 416.2.

Golds were higher but equities eased.

Canadian issues were also lower.

Starscene

By RUTH THOMPSON

When singing runs in the family, it can run into big money generation after generation. Pat Boone, who has been reigning as show biz's proudest pop in the wake of daughter Debby's success, knows. Reigning until now, that is, because when it comes to being the proud pop, Neil Sedaka is the new champ following a reception for his 16-year-old daughter, Dara, who duets with him in one segment of his new album, "In the Pocket,"

Pop is sweet, but no beauty. Dara is, which doesn't hurt. She bowled over all the men at a disco party.

TV Mailbag

During the early 1970s my favorite TV show was The Young Lawyers. Can you tell me what happened to its star, Zalman King? I thought he was a good actor, but I haven't seen him for years. One more thing, what's his address? — Lise Morrison, Fargo, N.D.

And I thought I was Zalman King's only fan. Welcome to the club. I can tell you that since The Young Lawyers failed to put up a very good defence on its own behalf, King made a few less-than-memorable B features, before putting on his producer's hat. He recently completed production on Roadie, a feature film starring Meatloaf, Blondie and Art Carney. You can probably reach him through his agent, Sylvie Gold at ICM, 8899 Beverly Blvd., Beverly Hill, CA 90048.

Create an unusual water garden for patio or terrace

By SADIE GREER
Copley News Service

People living in apartments or condominiums with terraces or ground floor patios often want to develop a container garden that is both beautiful and unusual.

For those who want to give their terrace gardens an exotic and distinctive touch, consider creating a water garden.

Many people, on seeing a garden pool for the first time, wonder if they could create something like it for their patio, deck or terrace.

The answer is that the apartment gardener can create his own garden pool, complete with plants, grasses, fish and snails. It can be designed to fit almost any size requirement.

A number of pools, in a variety of sizes are available. Made of plastic or fiber glass, they are reasonably priced and durable.

An example of what can be done with one of these pools is described in the Ortho book "Container and Hanging Gardens."

A plastic pool — holding 25 gallons of water — is purchased for $10. The pool's measurements are 21 inches wide and 19 inches deep. The pool can be used as is, or for a more decorative look can be placed in a half wine barrel. If you put casters on the barrel, you have a portable pool that can be moved to different areas of the terrace.

The next thing to consider is what goes into the pool. The first thing that will probably come to mind is water lilies. It is, in fact, essential to a pool garden for two reasons. First, it lends an elegant and exotic beauty to the pool. Even more important, however, is the fact that its pads act to prevent the loss of oxygen and keep the water cooler.

Hardy water lilies give the impression that they are difficult to grow and need protection. The truth is that they are far from delicate and can survive considerable abuse. Lilies dislike shade and all they need to flower abundantly is correct planting at a comfortable depth of water and a place in the sun. The more sun, the more flowers.

The other elements you will need are oxygenating grasses, snails and two or three fish that are four to five inches long.

The grasses are important in replenishing oxygen. Anacharis (Elodea) is most frequently used and has proven best for average size containers.

For snails, use a dozen ramshorn or trap-door water snails. The snails eat the algae, fish wastes and decaying matter which encourages algae growth.

The fish play an important role, also. They eat pests such as aphids, flies, mosquito larvae and other insects.

Together these elements form an ecological system for the pool garden where plants, fish and snails all live in harmony.

In addition to being a beautiful and unusual addition to the terrace or patio, a water garden can be a source of edible plants, according to Ortho's book. These include water chestnuts, watercress and taro.

YOU CAN MAKE IT!

Send for plans to make this trusty tractor for tots

By STEVE ELLINGSON

Children daydream about life on a farm, even if they've never been to one. There's the animals and chickens, room to run around and, of course, riding on a tractor. Here's a version of the trusty farmer's standby that you can't beat for mileage, safety, comfort or prestige.

Besides that, this clever, stylized version is just an awful lot of fun.

If you can imagine the child in your life wheeling around on this unique toy, then why not build one? Construction is a cinch with a full-size plan that features traceable parts, drawings, step-by-step photos, a complete materials list plus concise instructions.

Measuring 36" long by 18" high, it is cut from one 4x8 sheet of ⅝" plywood. Foot power and a simple axle-rope steering mechanism insure the child's safety. And once it's built, you'll have a circus fitting it out with surplus radio knobs, gauges, dials and other gadgets (of your own invention) to make it even more authentic.

To order the full-size Kiddie Tractor, Plan No. 610, send $2.50 (please add .50 cents extra for postage and handling) by cheque or money order to:

U-Bild Pattern Dept.,
Box 160, Cote St. Luc,
Montreal, Que., H4V 2Y3.

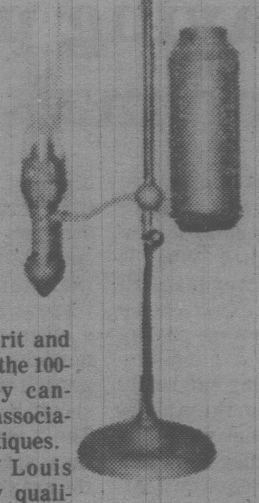
Chinoiserie desk and 1876 lamp

ANTIQUES



By JAMES G. McCOLLAM
Member, Antique Appraisers Assoc. of America
Copley News Service

Dear Mr. McCollam: Could you help me identify this cabinet? It is painted black with raised figures on the front. The interior is lined with copper and there is a perforated metal plate on the inside of the front door. If it has no value, I would like to strip it down and finish it natural. — J.H., Westminster, Calif.

Dear J.H.: The most valuable part of this cabinet is the finish, which is chinoiserie (Chinese). The original function of this cabinet was a humidor. It would be all right to remove the metal lining, etc., but the finish should be touched up and restored as best you can. It was probably made around the end of the 19th Century when Chinese styles were popular. The value, with the finish in good condition would range in the middle hundreds. When the colors are restored, the whole cabinet should be coated with satin varnish to protect from further deterioration.

Dear Mr. McCollam: We have had this brass lamp for over 40 years. It is 21 inches tall and is marked Manhatten Brass Co., patent 1876. I would like to know the value and anything else you can tell me about it. — E.B.P., San Diego, Calif.

Dear E.B.P.: This is an Argand lamp invented by Aime Argand in 1783. The design permitted air currents to flow freely past the wick and up the long narrow chimney, creating a brighter light. The fuel tank off to the other side contributed to the air flow and reduced the shadow caused by having a large bowl under the wick. The value would be in the $300 to $400 range.

In this column and replies to our readers, emphasis on the 100-year requirement for antiques has been made repeatedly. However, some collectibles that do not meet that requisite have been so eagerly sought and have brought prices that stagger the imagination. Now, if these items have sufficient artistic merit and are approaching the 100-year mark, they cannot be denied association with true antiques.

The works of Louis Comfort Tiffany qualifies for this status. "Louis C. Tiffany's Glass — Bronzes — Lamps," by Robert Koch, Crown Publishers Inc., New York, $9.95, is a complete collector's guide to Tiffany's products. There are over 350 illustrations that will aid in identifying Tiffany pieces.

Unfortunately, the average collector can't afford the prices current in shops and at auctions, but many people have in their possession Tiffany lamps, et al, but are not aware of their identity or value. Also, it is possible for the well-informed to pick up Tiffany items at garage sales and flea markets for nominal prices.

Send your questions about antiques with picture(s), and a detailed description to James G. McCollam, P.O. Box 687, Dunedin, Fla., 33528. Those of general interest will be published. If you desire a personal reply, send a stamped envelope and $1 per item.

Laying paving stones and making doors wider

Q. We want to install interlocking paving stones as a patio deck in our backyard. What is the proper way to install them? A. Your choice of interlocking paving stones is a good one since nothing can really happen to them. Because of the way they interlock they can't pull apart and leave unsightly gaps between them, nor will the heaving of the soil due to moisture or frost hurt them. When installing interlocking paving stones a specific method of installation must be followed exactly. If you want the paving stones to be at ground level, which is usually th case, excavate the area to exactly 4 inches deep. You can install curbs made from preserved wood or cedar if you desire, but if the sod is cut precisely it can hold the edge blocks together without the addition of a curb. After the excavation has been done to 4 inches then spread 2 inches of fine sharp sand known in the trade as Torpedo. This is a clean, fine sand with particles one-eighth of an inch or less. The sand should be slightly damp. The 2 inches of sand is then spread loosely in the area where the patio is going and use a straight 2x4 to strike off the top so that it is level. The 2x4 can be run on the wood curbs if you have installed them or on a temporary runner on either side of the area. You will have to notch out the 2x4 so that it is held 2 inches off the bottom of the excavated area. Make sure that the sand is level and exactly 2 inches thick. Do not walk on the sand or compact it. Then starting in a corner, lay the interlocking paving stones as shown in the brochure obtainable from your interlocking paving stone dealer. Be careful that you don't disturb the sand but simply set the blocks into it. Then use a plate vibrating compactor to vibrate the interlocking paving stones into the sand. Before you vibrate the stones you'll notice that they are about half an inch higher than what you want them to be. However the vibration will settle them into the sand this half inch. Then spread damp moist sand over the surface of the patio and sweep the sand into the cracks between the stones. It is not necessary or advisable to install plastic under a patio to prevent the growing of weeds. All the plastic will do is retain water, causing freezing to occur in the winter or forming a small lake for you under the patio in the summer.

Most weeds that grow between the openings of the interlocking paving stones are due to seeds being blown into the area from the surface. A small application of a herbicide usually is all that is needed to restruct to the growth of the weeds.

Q. We want to put in a wider garage door in our garage as we have a difficult time maneuvering our car through our 7-ft. door now. Is this a difficult job or can we do it ourselves?

A. You can do it yourself quite easily as long as you have obtained the proper information and materials before you start. I would suggest that you may want to install either a 9 ft. or 10-ft. door. Whenever you are opening up a door area to make it wider whether it is a house door or a garage door a new header has to be installed. The header is the beam above the door that supports the weight of the garage or building above it. The header is usually made up of two or more 2x6's or 2x8's of the required length and strength to support the weight. The header is then supported by what is called a cripple which really is a stud from the bottom of the header to the floor. This is nailed to another stud that runs right through past the end of the header and up to the top plate. Before you take your old door out and start to demolish the end of your garage, take note of how the existing header has been installed. Then simply enlarge the opening and install the new header in the same method. Remember that when you remove the existing header there shoud be temporary supports installed to support the weight of the garage. This usually can be done inside the garage a couple of feet from the entrance. When you are cutting the opening larger, remember to allow for the thickness of the jamb and trim if you install any. If the garage has been stuccoed then use a masonry blade in a power saw to cut the stucco and no stucco repairs will be required. Once the frame and trim have been installed, simply run a beading of acrylic compound where the stucco and the new frame meet. Remember that you can put in a wider door with no problem in a garage, but to have a door that is higher may present difficulties since various types and brands of doors require more or less head room. So make sure to check this before putting in a higher door. As far as the choice of door is concerned, I prefer a wood sectional door since more insulation value is provided by the wood door than by a metal door. The addition of a radio-controlled garage door operator is certainly an asset especially on stormy or rainy nights.

Q. We are looking for some solar-assisted heating for our house, but unfortuantely anything that we have seen is either too expensive or it doesn't work. Do you know of anything that really does work?

A. Yes. I have two hot air solar collectors on my house that I installed a year and a half ago and they work very well. They are simply hot air solar collectors but can provide enough supplementary hot air to heat my house when the sun is shining with no assistance from my heating system down to about -20C. The units are manufactured in Canada and retail for less than $600. For a 1200 sq. ft. bungalow usually one panel is all that is required, of course depending on the amount of heat that you need. The main problem that I have found with the units is circulating the air that is produced by the unit to the rest of the house. I have overcome this by leaving my furnace fan running continually. This picks up the warm air in the room where the solar collector is and distributes it to the other areas of the house. The unit is quite simple to install, measuring about 7 ft. high and 2 ft. wide and about 6 in. deep. You simply cut two holes in the wall the size of a hot air register and bolt the unit to the outside of the house. Of course it has to be on the south wall and you have to make sure that other buildings or trees do not shade the unit. The units efficiency is increased with the coming of snow. The snow on the ground reflects the sun's energy and increases the heat output of the unit. There is a small fan that extracts the heat from the unit that works on a thermostat. The electricity for the fan would average less than seventy-five cents per month. These units are available in some areas of Canada, however not in all areas. So if you wish further information please write to the manufacturer of the unit directly. The manufacturer is Deltair Solar Systems, 355 Johnson Ave. W., Winnipg, Manitoba, R2L 0J2.

Q. I heard you mention a sealing compound for concrete driveways on a recent radio show in the Victoria area. I didn't write it down and now I have forgotten it. What is it?

A. It is called an anti-spalling compound. It is specially formulated for concrete driveways and it soaks into the surface of the driveway to prevent water from soaking into the driveway and freezing during the cold months. This freezing action will cause the surface of the driveway to scale. It should be applied to all new concrete driveways after they have been cured properly and it works on old driveways too. It is available from building supply dealers.

INTERIOR DESIGN

By BARBARA TAYLOR BRADFORD

(c) 1979, Los Angeles Times Syndicate Inc.

Q — Although the living room of my new apartment is relatively large it must serve a variety of living needs, including dining. I would like advice about the type of seating pieces to buy, as well as dining table and chairs. Since I give all manner of parties, both large and small, I want to create a flexible furniture arrangement in the living area. Would modular units best produce this effect? — Mr. T.G., Washington, D.C.

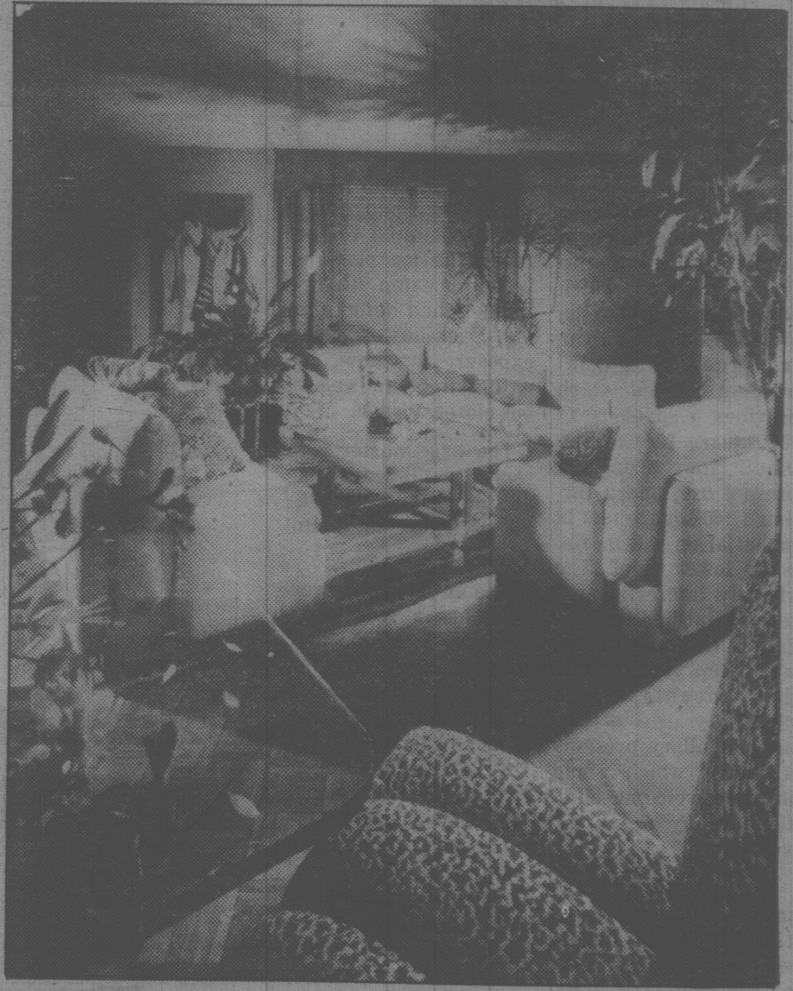
A — This room was designed specifically for comfortable living and entertaining, and it might offer some inspiration. It was created by Elyse Lacher, interior designer and vice president of Cy Mann Designs, and it is a dramatic yet cozy environment, perfect for either a large party or a quiet evening at home for two.

The luxuriously comfortable, light-colored modular seating unit is composed of a variety of different pieces which can be kept together or moved apart, depending on the size of the room and the number of conversation areas required. The modulars are arranged in an L-shape in the center of the room, just in front of the window. They are balanced by a matching sofa and an easy chair that help to form the airy, spacious arrangement.

All these pieces come together in a central arrangement that is highly flexible as well as unique. Pieces can be moved around at will to quickly form other groupings. All are anchored together by the Navajo area rug that splashes bright color underfoot. It also helps to demarcate living and dining areas.

The glass dining table, in foreground of photograph, is well situated to the living area and can be utilized for a seated dinner or informal meal, buffet style. Incidentally, the coffee and accent tables are perfect for serving appetizers.

Wall hangings, indirect lighting and lots of interesting trees and plants contribute much to the unusual setting.



This living room with a dining area was designed by Elyse Lacher specifically for entertaining and comfortable living. It is highly dramatic, also flexible and easy to live in. (Readers requiring further information should contact Marcy Spiegel, The Siesel Co., 845 Third Ave., New York, N.Y.)

PLAN FOR THE WEEK

PLAN Nº 80-1100

102,2m² // 1100sq.ft. / pi.²

Excellent floor plan and eye appeal in this urban home

Here's an excitingly modern three-bedroom home design of the grade entry type which is perfectly suited to the narrow-to-medium frontage residential building lot, but which provides a spacious 1,100 square feet of finished floor area, for present use, and a further 1,100 square feet in potential on the un-finished lower level. The visually interesting exterior, finished in horizontal channel siding, with deep vertical window accents, brick chimney and wraparound gallery, presents a facade which would make a welcome addition to any urban development.

The main entry leads into a spacious reception foyer and outerwear storage facility, which faces the stairway to the main living area. The main landing leads traffic naturally left, into the long rectangular living-dining room combination.

The living room features a raised-hearth masonry fireplace and full-width vertical windows with deep contemporary accenting. The dining area separates from the kitchen via convenient pocket door, and has sliding glass doors which provide access to the large wraparound balcony.

The large kitchen-dinette combination may be conveniently separated from the rest of the home via pocket doors, for privacy and hygiene.

The U-shape kitchen has an excellent step-saving work triangle configuration, generous countertop work surfaces and abundant cupboard storage. The separate dinette area has additional cupboard storage and swing-door access to the side balcony, for easy serving of outdoor meals in fine weather.

All three bedrooms are positioned to the rear of the floor plan, for freedom from disturbance when entertaining. Each has excellent exposure for view and natural light, and generous closet storage.

The large master bedroom has full-width closet storage and a three-piece ensuite bathroom with shower.

The un-finished lower level has a roughed-in masonry fireplace and roughed-in plumbing for a three-piece bathroom. The grade level has abundant space for the future development of two or three additional bedrooms and a generous-sized recreation room.

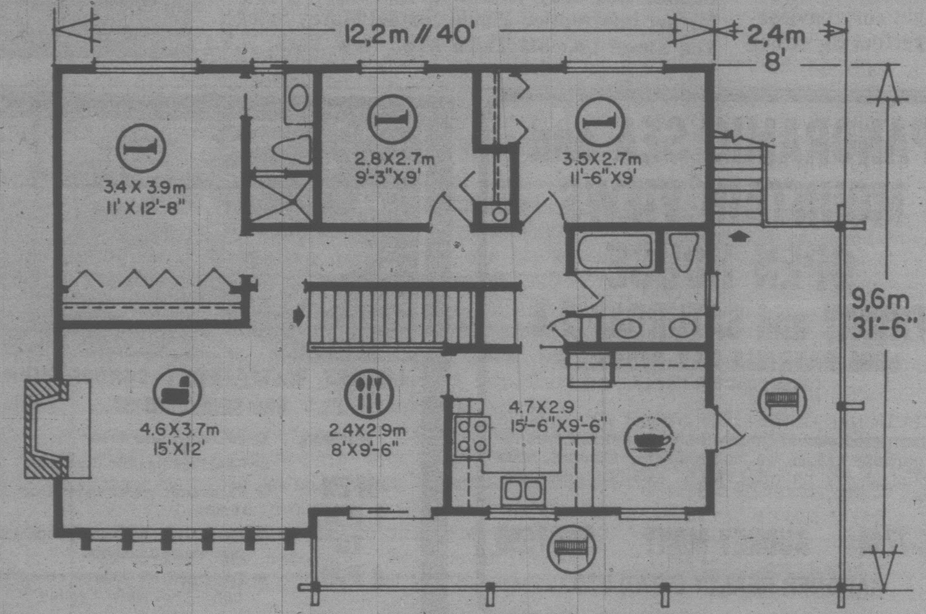
The design affords an excellent floor plan, great eye-appeal and a high degree of adaptability through its large, un-finished lower level.

Plans for design No. 80-1100 may be purchased either by the single set, at a cost of $85.00 for the first set and $15.00 for each additional set, or by the package. A five-set plan package, including the first set, is economically priced at $135.00 and an eight-set package, also including the first set, is only $175.00.

Whichever method your choose, please include $5.00 for postage and handling. B.C. residents add 4% sales tax.

Send for the current edition of Select Home Designs magazine, Series 44, featuring imaginative decorating and home improvement ideas, plus 320 quality home plans of every type. Available for $2.75 ($2.00 plus .75 cents postage and handling).

To order any of these items please send cheque or money order, payable to the Home of the Week. Address to: Home of the Week, 382 West Broadway, Vancouver, B.C., V5Y 1R2.



Why Earle Street was so named

Earle Street, in the Ross Bay area, linking St. Charles Street with Fairfield Road, was named to honour one of Victoria's pioneer merchants a noted early-day member of the House of Commons at Ottawa.

Thomas Earle, who was born in Ontario in 1837, was the son of an Irishman.

For a time, as a young man, he operated a general store at Brockville. In 1862, he came to British Columbia and went to the Cariboo, mining on Williams Creek.

By 1865 he was back in Victoria, bookkeeping in the grocery establishment of J. Rueffe and Company.

But the north and the excitement of gold called him away again, and in 1867 he was in the Big Bend country, operating a general store on French Creek.

Then he came back to Victoria, having made some money, and bought a share in the Rueffe grocery business.

Later he interested himself in railway construction in Washington state, mining and other businesses. He was elected a Victoria representative in the House of Commons, where he remained some years.

He died in Victoria in 1911.

ENERGYSAVE

This is the second of seven articles on do-it-yourself energy conservation in which writer Peter Tonge gives tips on plugging energy leaks in your home, tapping and storing solar heat, and insulating your shutters and hot-water heater.

By PETER TONGE
The Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON, Mass. — Charlie Wing, founder of Cornerstones Energy Group Inc., a hands-on school for solar building techniques in Brunswick, Maine, uses the water-in-the-leaky-bucket analogy to explain energy waste. The bucket with the holes in it is your house; the water you keep pouring into it is the energy needed to heat or cool it.

Their message is clear: before you invest in costly solar panels, wood stoves, add-on greenhouses, heat pumps, air conditioners or whatever, plug the leaks in your present home. In short: don't waste the warm air (or in summer the cool air) you already have.

What isn't readily understood is that the average home leaks like a sieve. Hold your hand an inch or so away from an electric light switch on any improperly insulated wall at night and feel the steady stream of cold air coming in. Multiply that by the number of outlets you have in the home, plus the keyholes and the cracks around window and door frames, including loose-fitting windows and doors, and those little streams amount to a regular flood of icy winter air. According to some measurements, those leaks in the average American home amount to the equivalent of one 10-square-foot window left wide open all year long.

The greater the difference between the outside cold and the inside heat, the greater the pressure on the warm air in your home to escape. So when the outside temperature drops below freezing or, worse still, below zero degrees F, that "open window" acts like an incredibly efficient vacuum cleaner, sucking up your heating dollars.

Wing and his wife, Susan, know the value of tightening up a home. They bought a large old house in Brunswick and saw the heating bill plummet once they had sealed off all the cracks by caulking, added weatherstripping to doors and windows, insulation to the walls and doors, ceiling and floor, and thermal shutters to the windows. From 3,000 gallons of oil a season, they have cut fuel needs down to just three cords of wood (the equivalent of 600 gallons of heating oil). "We've been able to throw out the furnace, dispense with oil heat altogether," says Wing.

But even before embarking on a plug-the-leaks program, the Wings say, there are some very cost-effective steps the homeowner should take: turning back the thermostat and switching off all lights, radios and TVs when leaving the room; boiling only as much water as you need at any one time; refusing to dawdle in the shower; cleaning the windows (dusty panes restrict the sun's entry) and light fixtures, and similar anti-waste actions.

Let energy-saving challenge your ingenuity. Gather your family together and ask them for suggestions. At the dinner table let family members tell how they saved energy that day. Exchange ideas with the neighbors, too. This way energy saving will become a habit — something as automatic as cleaning teeth or washing hands before coming to a meal.

"These are the most cost-effective steps you can take," says Wing. "You don't part with a cent but the cash savings are considerable." How considerable?

All the little savings are difficult to put down in figures, but according to Consumer Guide's Home Energy Saver, you can expect a 3 per cent rise in energy costs for each degree you set your thermostat above 70 degrees F. And the U.S. Department of Energy suggest a 10-degree F setback at night "is a great way to achieve a 10 to 25 per cent saving in heating bills while you sleep." It pays handsomely, then, to reach for a sweater rather than the thermostat and perhaps the nightcaps of Charles Dickens' day can be given another try. (Some caution should be exercised if elderly people live in the home. They tend to produce less natural body heat than younger folks and require somewhat higher air temperatures to feel comfortable.)

Turning down the hot-water thermostat from the 150 degrees F standard setting to around 115 degrees can realize an annual saving of "at least $20 for electric water heaters and $10 a year for gas," according to the Department of Energy. As it costs an average of $100 a year for the hot water (electric) used in a family's wash (one load a day) on an all-hot cycle, the savings will be considerable if the switch is made to a warm wash and cold rinse.

There are pleasantly surprising savings to be had, too, simply by developing a "trigger-happy" finger, as Charlie Wing puts it. By this he means the readiness to turn off anything that isn't being used — including the hot-water heater if you're away for a weekend or longer and room air conditioners if you are out of the room for more than four hours. The importance of turning off lights and radios is recognized when it is realized that these items contribute some 16 per cent to a household's energy bill.

Central heating should be turned as low as possible whenever you leave the house for more than four hours. Space heating and cooling take a 70 per cent bite out of the household energy budget.

The U.S. Department of Energy recently has brought out a pamphlet, "Energy Saver's Low Cost, No Cost." It features 11 important steps a homeowner can take at either no cost or very little cost to cut his energy-consumption bill. The pamphlet states that "by following all the suggestions, or whichever apply to you, we think you can save 25 per cent of your fuel oil, gas and electricity bills. At current energy prices, these suggestions will put from $100 to $500 a year back in your pocket . . ." All of them can be accomplished for $100 or less, from which the homeowner will be able to claim a 15 per cent residential energy tax credit when filing his income tax at the end of the year.

For many people, the task of adapting an existing home in this manner appears almost overhwelming. It needn't be. There's a simple satisfying way to energy efficiency — one step at a time. Make a list of tasks to be accomplished in order of priority, then throw it in a top drawer somewhere. Whenever you have the time, take out the list and tackle the top item only. One task is never intimidating. When completed, scratch it off the list.

One homeowner even told himself that he didn't care if he ever did all the jobs on the list. "But you know," he said, "it was amazing how soon they all got done."

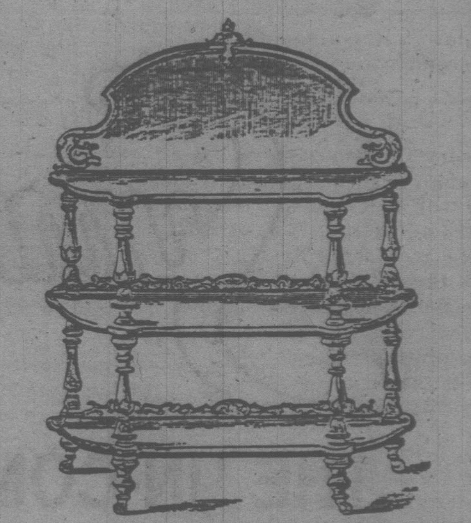
Antique Furniture File



Etagere or what-not, take your choice. The French were responsible for pieces like this, which were soon adopted by this country. They were made by the thousands and no Victorian home was complete without one. The one shown here has a strong rococco influence resembling Louis XV styles. They were usually made of walnut — sometimes mahogany or rosewood. If you can find one of this quality and design for less than $500, consider yourself lucky.

Installing a vanity

Be sure the water supply is off. Relieve the pressure in the pipes by opening the faucets. Then drain the piping from floor or wall.

Prepare new vanity cabinets by checking whether water supply and drain piping enter through the wall or the floor. Next cut holes in vanity to correspond with water supply. Install the vanity cabinet, counter top and sink in accordance to the manufacturer's instructions.

Hook up the water supply by joining the faucet shanks to the shut-off valve under the sink. Use flexible ⅜" supply lines.

Install drain and sink by following manufacturer's instructions. Then screw the tailpiece into the bottom of the drain. Connect P-trap to drainpipe using slip coupling and rubber washer. Next, just connect drainpipe to drainpipe. (A.B.S. piping is recommended for best results.)

MAKE A MUD ROOM

How to keep the children from tracking mud through the house this winter? By creating a mud room — an area next to the back door where coats and boots and galoshes can be stored. The idea is that when a wet, muddy child comes into the house, he will leave all his messy clothes in the mud room, changing into dry indoor clothes before entering the main part of the house.

Perhaps you already have an all-purpose utility room located inside the back door. If not, a simple hallway area will do. Install a few shelves to hold wet mittens and socks, and try to keep a few dry changes of clothing there as well. Hang coat hooks on door or wall, at a level every child can reach. Put a sturdy toy chest in the corner to hold outdoor toys and galoshes. Closed, this makes a dandy place to sit and change shoes.

Greenhouse build-ons collect solar energy

By MICHAEL deCOURCY HINDS
c. 1980 N.Y. Times

Solar-energy-collecting greenhouses are nothing new; the Dutch built greenhouses with insulating glass walls in the 18th century, and the English used south-facing, glassed-in conservatories to help heat their homes during the 19th century. But because many inefficient conservatories were also built, by the turn of the century glass rooms had gained a reputation for wasting heat and their popularity declined.

"It's a very old concept rediscovered," said Bill Yanda, who coined the term solar greenhouse in "The Food and Heat Producing Solar Greenhouse," the book he wrote with Rick Fisher.

According to Yanda, the necessary elements of a solar greenhouse are: orientation of the building to the sun (no more than 45 degrees off due south), proper tilt of the glass walls (60 degrees to vertical, depending on use and site), tight-fitting double-glazed walls and adequate ventilation to distribute the heat.

For maximum efficiency, greenhouses also need a way of storing excess solar energy, which may heat the room to more than 100 degrees even on a cold winter's day. Drums of water, masonry walls and concrete floors laid on a thick, insulated bed of gravel are common thermal storage systems. Other storage mediums, such as slim rods filled with heat-storing chemicals (by PSI Energy Systems, 4001 Holly Street, Denver, Colo. 80216, 800-525-1091), are being marketed.

The amount of thermal mass used depends on the nature of the greenhouse: one used primarily as a daytime solar furnace (sealed off from the house at night) benefits from a small "heat battery," but a greenhouse that stores heat for the house at night will need a substantial heat battery. Greenhouses used for growing vegetables or as living rooms will also need a thermal reservoir to moderate temperatures.

Books on solar greenhouses give guidelines for determining the size of the heat battery, based on location, orientation to the sun, the amount of glazing and the types of plants being grown, but homeowners are advised to consult an engineer or designer conversant in this field.

As an alternative to these storage systems, or as a supplement to them, depending on how efficient you want to be, greenhouses can be fitted with movable insulation panels, heavy curtains and other devices to reduce heat loss through the glass walls.

Double-glazed walls are optimum; single-glazing loses heat very rapidly and triple glazing, although it reduces heat loss, also reduces light transmittance and solar energy to such an extent that it may not be worth the added expense.

In very warm climates, however, single glazing may be adequate; and in very cold climates, where snow cover will increase solar radiation entering the greenhouse, triple glazing is recommended. Tropical plant gardeners may also prefer triple glazing.

The configuration of the greenhouse also significantly affects its performance. The most thermally efficient solar addition would have solid, well-insulated end walls, east and west, and a partially solid, well-insulated roof.

This partial roof will deflect the high summer sun, but it won't impede the rays from the low winter sun. But homeowners who prefer the all-glass look may have to forfeit some efficiency. Inefficient glass walls would also be needed on the east and west sides for serious gardening.

In summer, excess heat and sunshine can be eliminated by using insulating shutters on the end walls, aluminum and plastic shades that roll down from the roof and solar-blocking films that stick to glass. The traditional white greenhouse paint is also effective.

Perhaps the most efficient way of dealing with the undesirable summer heat streaming through the roof is to block it with a hot-water tank. Installed under the glass roof, and generally insulated and hidden from the room below, the domestic hot-water system can be made with old hot-water tanks or new solar collectors.

"There are a lot of trade-offs in greenhouse design, but you can have a successful greenhouse for growing vegetables and producing heat," said Yanda. Based on average heat savings and costs, greenhouses should pay for themselves within six years, he said.

Greenhouses that produce both heat and food usually pay for themselves in under three years, said Yanda, "and since greenhouses usually add more value to houses than they cost, you could say that they pay for themselves immediately."

The pay-back period, however, will greatly depend on how efficient and how costly the greenhouse is: a do-it-yourself kit that requires no foundation and costs $450 may pay for itself in heat savings within a couple of years, but a professionally installed model with a masonry foundation may cost $4,500 and take up to 20 years to pay for itself.

Tax credits are currently not available for building a solar greenhouse, but that hasn't stopped people from trying to claim the 30 percent credit, which may be increased to 40 percent this year. Some solar greenhouse manufacturers even advertise that their products are eligible for a credit "if the greenhouse is used as a solar collector."

The Internal Revenue Service, however, specifically states in Publication 903, "Energy Credits for Individuals," that greenhouses do not qualify for the credit.

"No structural component of a building or greenhouse can qualify for the credit," said Ron Young, a spokesman for the I.R.S., "and a solar collector can not be a room in which you can live." Some equipment, such as fans and ducts, might be eligible for the credit, however.
